MONGOLIA ACCUSES JAPANESE OF PLOT TO SEIZE TERRITORY

Says Manchukuo Preparing Way for Further Occupation by Avoiding Peaceful Settlement of Border Incidents—Mongolian Communique Describes Demands as Intolerable

MOSCOW, July 6 (AP).—Independent Mongolia today formally accused the Japanese army, already virtual master of North China, of plotting to seize Mongolian territory.

A communique issued at Ulan Bator, Mongolian capital, and published in the official Soviet press, said Manchukuo and Japanese forces had delivered an ultimatum demanding the right to maintain military observers in Mongolian territory. It made this charge: "Recent events prove that Manchukuo, with the Japanese army's support, wishes to avoid peaceful settlement of border incidents and prepare the way for further occupation of our territory."

CLOSELY RELATED
 Mongolia, with its Soviet type of Government, is closely related politically with the U.S.S.R. Its borders march with those of Siberia for many miles. Manchukuo lies to its east. North China, into which the Japanese army has penetrated deeply during recent months, is south.

The Japanese demands followed several Mongol-Manchukuo border incidents which were termed provocative in nature. They were presented even as Russia was busy seeking assurances against repetition of similar incidents, including alleged invasion of Soviet territory.

SENATORS SEEK STABILIZATION

Forty Join in Request to Roosevelt for Renewed Silver Buying

WASHINGTON, July 6 (AP).—Contending banks were using the Treasury's silver-buying machinery for their own profit, Senator Thomas (D., Okla.) said today. President Roosevelt will be served immediately with a request backed by forty senators for early stabilization of gold and silver.

The forty senators, including members from all but about a dozen states, appended their names to a letter addressed by Thomas to the President requesting adherence to the monetary policy adopted by the last Congress. Under terms of that, the Government was pledged to continue buying silver until either one-quarter of the nation's monetary metal was silver or until the price of that metal had reached $1.29 an ounce.

SAYS BANKERS PROFIT
 Commenting on the recent drop in the price of silver from a high of $1.40 to about 60c, Thomas contended the banks, with foreknowledge of when the Treasury was to buy or sell silver, were able to profit either on the upturn or the drop.

The Oklahoma emphasized he did not accuse either Secretary Morgenthau or the banks with "duplicitous" but insisted "banks will be banks" when an opportunity for profit is offered.

SCREEN STAR TO FISH ON ISLAND

Douglas Fairbanks Returns to Vancouver—Lady Ashley Not Named From United States

VANCOUVER, July 6 (AP).—Although confirmation was lacking, it was reported here tonight that Douglas Fairbanks, with Lady Sylvia Ashley, would leave by airplane tomorrow morning for Vancouver Island. They had previously planned a short fishing trip.

Fairbanks could not be reached at his hotel, but it is understood that the former film star, who arrived by airplane from Hollywood this morning, would return to the South early next week.

Lady Ashley stated today that she had not applied for a permit to enter the United States. Immigration officials here denied reports that she had been banned.

Pat Burns Better And a Year Older

CALGARY, July 6 (AP).—Senator Patrick Burns, of Calgary, today received congratulations from all parts of the world on his 75th birthday. Born in Ontario, Ont., July 6, 1856, Senator Burns came to Western Canada in 1878. He is recovering from an illness which at one stage threatened to become critical.

SCIENCE TO BE FEATURE

Student Group Given Automobile Building at Willows For Exhibition

Starting with a small, congested corner on the top floor of the Manufacturers' Building, the sponsors of the Victoria Hall of Science at the Willows Exhibition, which will be held this year for seven days instead of six, have been given the Automobile Building for their exhibits this year, while the Vancouver Exhibition has invited them to establish one there for this year's fair.

The personnel of the Hall of Science staff has been increased so that this year a much more comprehensive display will be arranged. Whereas last year the exhibit was confined to an area of 900 square feet, the displays will cover an area of 1,900 square feet this year. The group is constructing its own building at the Vancouver Fair along futuristic lines, it was announced yesterday.

MORE ANIMATED
 The Hall of Science at the Willows this year will be far more animated than last year, although some very interesting demonstrations and experiments were carried out last year.

Angus Tregidga, laboratory assistant at the University of British Columbia, will have charge of the physics department; Charles Archibald, of the University of British Columbia, will have charge of the chemistry section and applied sciences.

OLD-TIMER OF NORTH DROWNS

Thomas Moore, of Prince Rupert Swept to Death in Netchako

PRINCE RUPERT, July 6 (AP).—Thomas Moore, an old-time resident of this district, is dead, a victim of drowning, apparently, as he attempted to get into a boat at a fast-running spot in the Netchako River.

He was one of a party from Prince Rupert and district which had crossed the river to see the clean-up in the gold-saving plant of Netchako Golds, the Victoria company holding concessions on the river at Miwath.

Premier Pattullo was to have gone with the party, but his trip was called off on account of the fact that darkness was coming and the river was running strong.

Mr. Moore, who was farming part of the land included in the Netchako Golds bench lease, had started to the river with the intention of crossing. As he stepped into his boat the craft turned somewhat and he fell into the river.

Witnesses were unable to help him as he was carried quickly away by the current.

Vote Favors Liquor Sale in Carolina

RALEIGH, N.C., July 6 (AP).—Liquor control forces continued their victorious march over the prohibitionists as nine North Carolina counties voted today upon the legalization of spirits.

In all of the counties huge majorities were piled up for the opening of liquor stores, and from some of them came reports that steps would be taken at once to open up places of sale. Previously six other counties had voted strongly for legal sales.

Man Too Hard on Animal to Tame

SANTA ROSA, Cal., July 6 (AP).—Donna Cowan tamed so many bronchos that twice she was chosen world's champion cowgirl, but, in filing a divorce suit here yesterday, she asserted she could not tame her husband, Norman Cowan, a former world's champion rider and rodeo star.

Making Assault on Mount Waddington

The thirteenth attempt to scale Mount Waddington's unconquered 13,260-foot peak is under way, a party of eight members of the Sierra Club of California now being somewhere on the mountain. The party will traverse the thirty miles of the glacier at the base of Mount Waddington. There, at 10,000 feet, a base camp will be established from which the ascent of the peak will be undertaken whenever the weather conditions permit.

HEAT AND LIGHTNING TAKE THIRTY LIVES IN EASTERN STATES

Sailing of Prince John Delayed by Accidents at Wharf

PRINCE RUPERT, July 6 (AP).—A series of accidents here tonight resulted in postponement of the sailing of the steamship Prince John, and injury to a woman.

As the boat was pulling away from the dock for Queen Charlotte Islands, she broke a mooring line. In the recoil, Miss Gandy, a visitor from England, had her leg broken.

The vessel returned to the wharf and crashed through the dock, damaging the ship. There was a full list of passengers aboard, who were dispatched to their hotels pending new sailing arrangements.

Relief Strikers Leaving Trains To Go to Camps

Disbanding of Regina Marchers Is Being Completed Rapidly—Some Refuse to Register for Work—Sixty Released From Custody—Winnipeg Demonstrators Stay Together

REGINA, July 6 (AP).—Regina, free of the army of relief camp strikers that made the city their headquarters for three weeks, breathed easier today as members of the scattered battalion made their way homeward.

Disbanding of the men who came via freight from camps on the Pacific Coast and Alberta was done Friday. The move left Winnipeg the only prairie city in which relief camp strikers are gathered in any appreciable number.

FIRM IN INTENTIONS
 There the men remained firm in their intention of presenting their complaints against camp conditions to Ottawa authorities. Some 600 of them camped under canvas in the exhibition grounds and were being fed by the Manitoba Government.

Special trains rolled westward Saturday, stopping at various points to discharge their quota of the retreating "on-to-Ottawa" marchers.

Approximately 125 men detained at Calgary to be met by a small crowd. Everything was orderly. The men were joyful and in good spirits as they waved to their 385 camp friends who continued on to the Pacific Coast.

Seventy-six of those at Calgary, however, refused to register for camp work and official: announced that no further aid would be extended to them. Others went to their homes or to friends.

At Edmonton forty-seven men were released.

Vancouver Island Paid Millions for Building of Dominion Gov't Road

It has been repeatedly pointed out in these articles that Vancouver Island has been called upon to bear a disproportionate cost of public works on the Mainland in view of the public expenditures made on the island. It has been argued that taxpayers on Vancouver Island have been consistently discriminated against in favor of those residing elsewhere in British Columbia; that the peculiar needs of the island have not been given sympathetic consideration; and legitimate demands for improvements have been met with contemptuous indifference by successive Governments. An examination of the history of British Columbia shows that this only Vancouver Island residents have been contributing to pay for public works, and particularly roads on the Mainland, but that they have been called upon to carry obligations in that part of the Province that rightfully belonged to the Federal Government.

British Columbia was—and is—entitled to a wagon-road from the Rocky Mountains to Port Moody, constructed by the Dominion of Canada. Such a road has not been constructed by Ottawa, but sections have been built at great expense by the Provincial Government, and the Island has had to contribute millions in taxes toward this work which is doing so today. This is detrimental to Vancouver Island. It is equally unfair to other sections of British Columbia.

The promise to construct the wagon-road is contained in the Act of Union—having the effect of a treaty—by which British Columbia entered Confederation. The original terms of Union were altered in 1874.

Washington Turns Deaf Ear To Pleadings From Ethiopia

ROME, July 6.—A ringing battle cry from Benito Mussolini's lips echoed through Italy tonight as the country turned heart and soul to preparations for the war with Ethiopia, now believed inevitable.

Before nearly 15,000 black-shirt volunteers destined for service in East Africa, who gathered at the Salerno today, Il Duce, cheered to the echo, declared: "We have decided upon a struggle in which we, as a Government and a people, will not turn back. The decision is irrevocable."

See Act as Stabilizer Of Markets

WASHINGTON, July 6 (AP).—Farm administration officials today gave out intimations that they viewed the Canadian Government wheat control steps as a potential stabilizer for the world market.

Declining to make detailed comment pending an opportunity to study the new Canadian law designed to peg prices, Agricultural Adjustment Act officials said they believed the subsidy plan would have only a temporary depressing reaction on the world wheat market.

Pears that Canada, under the new law, might dump a large surplus of wheat on the market at low prices were indicated here as a cause of the short drop in prices at Chicago yesterday and today.

FAIL TO FIND SEA MONSTER

Strange Serpent Reported Caught by Fishermen Near Prince Rupert

PRINCE RUPERT, July 6 (AP).—Despite a day's reconnoitering off Jap Inlet, Porcher Island, where Skeena River salmon fishermen reported they had beached a strange sea monster, which became entangled in their nets Friday, Dr. Neal Carter, director of the Prince Rupert Fisheries Experimental Station, and party, returned to Prince Rupert tonight.

With a fisheries "patrol" cruiser, reporting failure to find the carcass of the creature, better directions will be sought from the fishermen who captured the monster before another attempt is made to find it.

FOOD SUPPLIES RUNNING SHORT

Residents of Point Barrow Awaiting Arrival of Ship For Change in Diet

POINT BARROW, Alaska, July 6 (AP).—Food supplies nearly depleted, the small colony of white residents and natives looked forward anxiously today to the arrival of the schooner C. S. Holmes, of Seattle, and possibly one or two other ships which may make port here. Severe hunger is reported by some.

The Fourth of July dinner at the Presbyterian Mission Hospital consisted of rice, milk, crackers and tea, supplemented by wild meats, and wild fowl. As many children, mothers and old people as possible were served.

Many were almost ravenously hungry, eating like animals.

WANT CHANGE OF DIET
 Although fish, wild fowl and other game are available in sufficient numbers to prevent starvation, the white families in particular have become weary of this almost constant diet and particularly welcomed the change in fare. The natives, likewise, were avid for the food to which they have become accustomed through contact with the whites.

What severe hunger there is has been confined to the natives.

The ice movement at sea is active, which should facilitate the arrival of the Holmes rather than delay her for weeks outside. She usually arrives about the first of August.

Six Lost When Barge Is Sunk

LORIENT, July 6 (AP).—The sea-going barge Saint Remy, from Lorient, was cut in half in a collision today with the heavy collier Divatte, of Brittany, and six men of the Saint Remy's crew were lost. The Divatte could rescue only three. The collision occurred in a heavy fog.

PICKETS EXTEND SHIP BLOCKADE

Work Halted for Time on Five More Vessels in San Francisco Waterfront Dispute

SAN FRANCISCO, July 6 (AP).—Maritime union pickets extended their blockade to include six ships on the San Francisco waterfront today as a new dispute arose, but later withdrew from all but two.

The pickets, who for two weeks have blockaded the Canadian steamer Point Clear, spread their lines to five McCormick Steamship Company vessels.

Later the pickets were withdrawn from all ships but the Point Clear, loaded with cargo diverted from British Columbia by a strike of dock workers there, and the McCormick Line's steamer Charles L. Wheeler.

Mill Operators Delay Reopening After Outbreaks

Everett Lumbermen Decide Against Resuming Operations With Non-Union Men After Serious Clashes Are Reported at Other Centres—Tear Gas Bombs Hurlled

SEATTLE, July 6 (P)—A sudden decision on the part of Everett lumber mill operators not to attempt to "open up" on Monday entered into the troubled Pacific Northwest lumber strike situation late today, as the ninth week of the strike ended after more reports of violence had come from other points.

The operators of six Everett mills, acceded to a request of J. H. Conners, State Commissioner of Labor, a spokesman said. Conners had conferred earlier today with members of the striking Sawmill and Timber Workers' Union there.

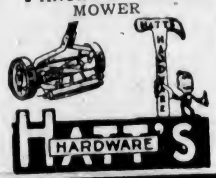

Conners told the operators he believed there was a possibility of more negotiations between the two sides. Other cities where operators have "opened up" the past two weeks, at Tacoma, with the aid of the National Guard, and at Longview and Aberdeen, with the aid of the state patrol and police, have been the scenes of violence.

STRIKERS HEAD FOR VANCOUVER

Government Alters Plans to Handle "Marchers" at Terminal City

Returning "on-to-Ottawa" relief camp strikers, numbering 1,100, will be handled at Vancouver as well as at Kamloops, Hon. John Hart, Minister of Finance and Acting Premier, announced following a meeting of the executive council yesterday morning.

This action was taken when the Government was informed by Premier Gardiner, of Saskatchewan, that the strikers had been granted transportation to Vancouver.

Facilities are available at Kamloops for the handling of single relief men if they desire to proceed to that point. However, it was learned that the majority of them are routed to Vancouver. That accounts for the sudden change in the Government's plan, which formerly was to distribute the men to the various relief camps from a central distributing station at Kamloops.

"Provision has been made there to give men eligible for camps, relief until accepted," Mr. Hart said. "If the men refuse to accept the offer to go to camps from Kamloops and continue to Vancouver, those who immediately register in Vancouver for camps will be given relief until sent to camp or are found ineligible for admission, but it is definitely stated no provincial relief will be granted those who do not apply for admission."

Meanwhile, a report by the Western Pine Association at Portland reflected the increased business of the industry in the past few weeks, following the limited resumption of work in various areas. New business, totaling 62,804,000 board feet, was announced for the week ending June 29, an increase of 34 per cent over the three-year weekly average for June.

At Seattle, however, the West Coast Lumbermen's Association announced that State Department of Public Works reports showed serious losses in freight car loadings for the whole period of the strike, which will be starting its tenth week next week. Forest products normally total 40 to 50 per cent of the freight loaded in the state, but this year the percentage is much lower.

TENSION AT ABERDEEN
Aberdeen again saw violence yesterday, although the largest picket line ever assembled jeered at workmen going into the harbor plywood plant. Five of the six sawmill and plywood plants operated there with small crews.

At Olympia, the Northwest Joint strike committee declared, that Governor Martin faced the threat of a recall, in a statement criticizing his calling out of the National Guard.

The committee said that the "people, in no way, wish to uphold any strike breaker."

The Bolcom-Canal Lumber Company plant was idle here today, but it and four other plants will resume on Monday, operators said.

Latest Arms to Be Put on Show

KASSEL, Germany, July 6 (P)—Germany's veterans of the Great War, 200,000 strong, met here today to swap yarns and discuss Adolf Hitler's rearmament plans.

"They met one day before foreign military attaches in Berlin will get an official glimpse of the fighting weapons Germany has developed since the war."

"All the latest weapons" will be demonstrated.

Previously the Canadian Government, in an effort to compose the existing differences, had offered to construct a wagon-road along the line of railway to be built. This had been rejected by the Province which saw in the proposal an endeavor to avoid the early completion of the railway. It was again advanced when argument was presented to Lord Carnarvon, and again British Columbia insisted upon the immediate construction of the railway.

Lord Carnarvon, in his judgment, to which both Governments were pledged to accept, stated:

"That a wagon-road and telegraph line shall be immediately constructed. There seems here to be some difference of opinion as to the special value to the Province of the undertaking to complete these two works; but after considering what has been said, I am of opinion that they should both be proceeded with at once, as, indeed, is suggested by your Ministers (Canadian)."

BINDING ON DOMINION
British Columbia was disappointed at the Carnarvon award, which was substituted for Section 41 of the original Terms of Union, but which, by reason of the pledges given, became part and parcel of the agreement that bound British Columbia to Canada, and just as effective as any other portion of the agreement upon which British Columbia entered Confederation. Although voicing disappointment at the failure of Lord Carnarvon to compel immediate construction of the railway (in another part of his award by which the time was extended for completion of the line), British Columbia was prepared to accept the award.

Canada did not fulfill the exact railway terms of the revised treaty, and two years later British Columbia took steps to withdraw from Confederation. A petition to that effect was sent forward, through the Federal Government, but was not sent to London.

At this juncture the Earl of Dufferin, Governor-General of Canada, with the cognizance of the Imperial Government, came to Victoria. He was met on his arrival by a loyal demonstration, but on Port Street there was an arch under which he refused to pass. It bore the legend, "Carnarvon Terms or Separation."

REPEATED PLEDGES
On September 20, 1876, the Governor-General addressed the people of Victoria. He was anxious to placate them. He did so, by picturing to them the eventual coming of the railway to Esquimalt, which would be the terminus. He defended the conduct of the Canadian Government in his lengthy address—What is of interest at this time was his reference to the wagon-road.

"The promised wagon-road would necessarily follow pari passu with construction," he declared. That was that it would be built coincidentally with the railway.

Here you have the Governor-General of Canada, speaking with the approval of that Government and of the Imperial Government, declaring that the road would be built.

C.P.R. FINISHED
Time went on, and the original intention of the Government of Canada to construct the railroad as a public undertaking gave place to an arrangement with a syndicate to build it. The C.P.R. syndicate did the work. Construction was pushed with such rapidity by the private company that the line was finished five years before the expiry date. British Columbia was satisfied at the time. There was practically no settlement east of Ashcroft, and consequently no local agitation for the road. The Canadian Government, declaring that the road would be built.

HAD APPROVAL
Canada agreed to build the road. The Governor-General of the Dominion gave assurance that it would be done, and there was no reason to doubt that the word of the Queen's representative was not that of the Dominion, and bore the approval of the Imperial Government as well. Indeed, the latter is evidenced in a dispatch from the Colonial Secretary: "...I naturally anticipated that the result of your communications with them (the Government and the people of British Columbia) would be to enlighten them as to the views and policy of the Dominion Government, and the difficulties with which Government has had to contend in fulfilling the terms of the settlement which I proposed in 1874.

"I have already learnt enough of your proceedings to feel assured that I do not misinterpret the result of your visit, in believing that my anticipations have been to a great extent fulfilled."

PLEDGE UNFULFILLED
The point that it is desired to make here, is that the solemn undertaking of the Dominion to build the road has never been fulfilled, that millions have been spent by British Columbia in constructing portions of that highway along the C.P.R., and that a request should be made to Ottawa to refund the expenditures so made, and that the contract made in 1874 be fulfilled. Vancouver Island contributed one-third of the millions that have been used to build sections of that road money to put the highways of the Island into proper shape to meet the requirements of present-day traffic. In fairness to all the taxpayers, and especially to those on Vancouver Island who have been bled white, to build Mainland roads in the past, a demand should be made upon the Dominion to implement the contract made sixty-one years ago.

Vancouver Island has been called upon to help pay for that road that was the duty of the Dominion to build. Vancouver Island should have its money returned to it, for the construction of much-needed highways on the Island.

It is time there was a new deal for Vancouver Island.

RELIEF STRIKERS BEING DETAINED

from the relief contingent left a "striker special" to the chers of 343 comrades who traveled farther west. A handful of citizens, including Mayor J. Clarke, met the smiling strikers as they returned.

Sixty of those taken into custody here were freed today and seven others were remanded when they appeared in court. It was estimated that fifty-one others remained in custody. The condition of those injured in the riots and still in hospital was reported improving.

Offers of 600 jobs on farms and camps were given Manitoba's quota of strikers today but so far none has taken advantage of them.

A certain writer, who spent six months and twenty-four hours a year out of England to avoid British income tax, told a friend he was working on a novel with a strong religious theme which might begin a new religious revival. He added:

"By the way, don't say anything in your paper about seeing me. I'm forty-eight hours ahead of my time for coming back to England."

ENTER INTO VERBAL TILT

U.S. Marshal and Defence Attorney Engage in Battle Of Rights

TACOMA, July 6 (P)—U.S. Marshal A. J. Chitty and John F. Dore, chief defence counsel, engaged in a verbal tilt today over Chitty's charges that Dore in Federal Court yesterday handed Mrs. Margaret T. Waley, Weyerhaeuser kidnap case defendant, a cheering letter from her husband, Harmon Waley, who pleaded guilty to the charge and attempted to exonerate his wife, and has started a forty-five-year term in McNeil Island Federal Prison, near here.

"All letters, or anything else for Mrs. Waley must pass through my hands for censorship," Marshal Chitty said. "The rule is known to her attorneys as well as others, and was laid down because of the danger that prisoners might receive narcotics through the mails, or Cayenne pepper to throw in officers' eyes in escape attempts."

ADMITTS DELIVERING LETTER
Dore, in Seattle, today admitted handing Mrs. Waley a letter from her husband on Friday, and said he will hand her anything else he pleases. Told of Chitty's warnings, Dore said: "He doesn't know what he's talking about. The letter I handed Mrs. Waley was delivered to the Thurston County sheriff, and was from her husband. Anytime I want to hand anybody a document in court, I will—and I haven't heard of any rule that says I cannot."

"I've got a rule that says he can't do it," Chitty countered. The marshal said he, himself, gave Mrs. Waley two letters on Friday, one from a "religious fanatic" in Ohio and one from one of Mrs. Waley's former school teachers in Utah.

Many of the Government's seventy to seventy-five witnesses were here today, awaiting the start of testimony on Tuesday in the morning's efforts to convict Mrs. Waley of conspiring with her husband and the fugitive, William Dufard, alias Mahan, to kidnap nine-year-old George Weyerhaeuser and with kidnapping him May 24 and releasing him for $200,000 ransom.

BRINGING RANSOM MONEY
Arrivals included: Jere J. Murphy, colorful police chief, of Butte, Mont., whose two subordinates, James Mooney and Ed O'Connor, are driving here with the car and the $15,355 ransom, money which Mahan abandoned there early last month. Murphy visited with Daniel McGrath, special assistant to the Attorney-General, who sailed from Seattle later in the day on a Mainland, Alaska, farm colony mission. McGrath is a former Butte attorney.

The thirteen jurors—one an alternate—including two women, selected Friday, attended a theatre this afternoon after news reels were previewed by bailiffs to insure nothing about the case would be shown. Later they went for a walk. They are being guarded in the Tacoma Hotel a short distance from the Federal Court.

One of Lord Beaverbrook's editors took the part of Pinkerton in a Carl Rosa production of "Madame Butterfly" at Brighton. Sir Harry Preston gave him the royal suite at the Albion Hotel and sent champagne to his dressing-room at the theatre. As for Lord Beaverbrook, all he did was to ring-up on the phone:

"Good morning, Mr. Pinkerton." "Good morning, Lord Beaverbrook." "And that was all. He returned his uniform and toupe to Willie Clarkson, the theatrical wig-maker, and went back to his newspaper. "Never could I be anyone but myself," he says.

Mr. Baxter, the editor, discovered he had a voice and fancied himself as a singer. Once he rendered a solo in the presence of Lord Beaverbrook, who, incidentally, gave him his first chance in Fleet Street. Afterwards Lord Beaverbrook sent him a note: "My Dear Baxter: "I have heard you sing. More than ever I advise you to take up journalism."

Victoria's Historic Spots

ONCE USED FOR MOORING
The above photographs show two venerable wrought iron ringbolts, let into the rock just below the point where Fort Street runs into Wharf Street. As far as can be ascertained, they were set in with molten lead not long after James Douglas established a Hudson's Bay Company fort here in 1843, ninety-two years ago. The ringbolts were used as moorings by sailing vessels before there was a dock in the harbor, and were also made use of to caulk ships for cleaning on a small beach below. Close by there is a large cistern, from which wind-jammers secured their water. Pioneers are of the opinion that these two links with the past should be protected by an Historical Objects Preservation Act marker.

Bound for Hawaii on an extended holiday, C. W. Allen, of Glenview, Kentucky, retired vice-president of the Belknap Hardware Manufacturing Company, is enjoying a short visit at the Empress Hotel with his wife and two sons, L. L. Allen and C. W. Allen, Jr. From here the party will go to Seattle.

In speaking of conditions in his state, Mr. Allen said business was considerably better and there was every indication that the march back to prosperous times would be unhampered.

Saw Man Hanging by Rope as He Slowly Slipped to His Doom

Parachutist Unable to Save Practical Joker Carried Aloft by Balloon Rope Forced to Watch Hopeless Struggle for Life

Bill Henderson, veteran Toledo parachute jumper, tells here of the drama in the clouds in which he and a practical joker, Fredrick Cardoni, played a game of hide-and-seek in the air. The jumper, Fredrick Cardoni, was carried aloft by the balloon rope and was slowly carried aloft, where he lost his hold and plunged to his death.

By WILLIAM C. HENDERSON
(Copyright, 1935, by the North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.)

DETROIT, July 6.—Up in the sky there we believed we were going to die together—just because of the little joke he thought he was playing for his family and the crowd that packed the field. They tell me he ran out and grabbed the tilt-top rope just to get a lift of a few feet when I left the ground. I first saw him at about seventy-five feet. He yelled to me and I was startled to hear a voice so close.

"Hey! Hey!" he said, and when I looked at him he was half smiling. I went cold all over. We were up a hundred feet and going faster.

A FATAL SEE-SAW
"What the hell are you doing here?" I asked him, so angry I could hardly yell. He had grabbed my tilt-top rope—the rope that dangled from the top of the balloon and is used to tilt it up and down to empty it of hot air. I knew we were seeing a sawing up there, with his weight likely to spill the air any moment. It would have been all over fast, then.

He was hanging, just opposite me, slightly below, and about fifteen feet out. I was hanging directly under the bag, with one leg through the looped rope I ride before I let go for my parachute jump. When I let go that looped rope, the eight-pound sandbag on the end of the rope he was riding tips the balloon and the air rushes out, permitting the weight to carry the bag straight down to earth. I looked up and the balloon was tilted far over on its side from his weight.

We were 1,500 feet up. I looked over at him, hanging by his hands and with his feet spread out loosely. He looked down and he was frightened.

"What'll I do now?" he asked. "Hang on, akin the cat, you'll be safe," I told him. "Wrap your leg around the rope under you and get the strain off your hands."

He kicked a little, but didn't try very hard.

"CAN'T CUT LOOSE"
"Try!" I yelled. "Try harder! You've got us in a swell jam. I can't cut loose, now."

If I'd cut loose with my chute, his weight would have tipped the bag and that would have been the end for him. We were now 2,000 feet up, and when I looked at the bag, I saw the hot air was cooling and the bag beginning to deflate. We were still going up, 2,500 feet or more.

"I can't hang on much longer," he said.

"You've got to," I said. "Wrap that loose rope around your leg or your body, just swing it with your hands."

"God, my hands are getting numb," was all he said.

"I'M GOING NOW"
He kicked once and got his feet up to the bag. "No more," he said. "I'm going, now."

He bit into the sandbag with his teeth and his hands slipped a little more. Then he let go. His hands just opened and he dropped straight for the shore-line, with his body stiff and going head downward.

The balloon straightened out above me. I watched where he fell. Then I kicked loose from my leg-rope under the bag and dropped after him. I opened my chute and the balloon, emptied of the air by the sandbag and tilt-rope, went floating past me as I rode down.

Y.M.C.A. CAMP
OPENS MONDAY

Sixty Boys to Go Under Canvas for First Week at Glinz Lake, Sooke

With leaders and camp officials already under canvas, sixty boys were last night preparing to enter the first week's Y.M.C.A. camp at Glinz Lake, Sooke, on Monday. The camp opens tomorrow for its annual fourteen-day duration, terminating on July 22. Some forty boys will go into camp for the second week, commencing July 15. There still remains vacancies for twenty boys for the second week.

Vivian Shoemaker and members of his camp staff spent the greater part of the week in preparing the new site for the first influx of boys. Cook house and tents have been pitched and the camp now awaits the first contingent of lads.

SPLENDID LOCATION
The feature of the camp this year is its splendid location. The lake occupies about fifteen acres at 1,000 feet elevation, and nestles among the Sooke Hills near Mt. Shephard. The property consists of 330 acres of wooded and hilly lands, and makes an ideal setting for the activities of the camp.

The all important matter of eating—always a big consideration, but even greater at a boys' camp—has been left in the hands of Mrs. H. Norris, an experienced cook. Ten leaders of high standard will be in charge of the various tents, while Mr. Shoemaker, as camp director, will be the guiding light of the camp.

During the camp, directors of the Y.M.C.A. will pay a visit to the site. The date has not been set. Visitors will be welcomed at the camp on Saturday afternoons of each week. Tea will be served.

MUSSOLINI SHOUTS HIS BATTLE CRY

cals designed to burn the bare feet of Emperor Haile Selassie's soldiers.

While Fascists shout to Mussolini's escape from harm when lightning struck the wireless antennae of his big three-motor airplane while it was fighting its way down through an electrical storm to the little west coast town, authoritative sources here, reliable to the point of certainty, neither wanted nor would accept mediation of her conflict with Ethiopia.

NO HALF SETTLEMENT
Once again they declared the matter one to be settled—and settled once for all—directly between Italy and Ethiopia. Italy was no half settlement such as territorial concessions, they said.

If Haile Selassie is willing to ask Italy to assume an armed protectorate over his country, these sources said, then war may be avoided. If not, war is certain.

INSURING NEUTRALITY
WASHINGTON, July 6 (AP).—The threatened outbreak of hostilities between Italy and Ethiopia today stirred new action in Washington designed to insure American neutrality in event of war.

The State Department revealed that William Perry, American ambassador in Addis Ababa, had been authorized to advise the approximately 125 American citizens now in Abyssinia to concentrate in the Ethiopian capital or leave the country.

The Afro-European tension simultaneously gave Senate munitions investigators a new whip to speed Congressional action on its proposed arms embargo and neutrality legislation.

"LOATH TO BELIEVE"
The State Department's action toward the evacuation of this country's nationals was almost coincidental with the American note to Haile Selassie, Ethiopian Emperor, rejecting a plea for invocation of the Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact. In it Secretary Hull said this Government was "loath to believe" there would be any outbreak of war.

Responsible officials here contended, however, that the exact move, based upon the premise of actual hostilities, was merely the exercising of wise and necessary precautions in preparing for any eventuality.

Other nations have already taken steps for the evacuation of their nationals if, and when, war comes to the African mountain kingdom.

URGENT RESOLUTIONS
Acting under the urging of Senators Nye (Republican, North Dakota) and Clark (Democrat, Missouri), members of the munitions committee, the Senate foreign relations committee ten days ago reported out two resolutions aimed at preserving American neutrality.

One would bar Americans from the danger zone by denying them passports. The second would prohibit any private or public loans to belligerent nations. Both were aimed at preventing situations likely to induce this country to enter war.

Another resolution, sponsored by Senator Pope (Democrat, Idaho), empowering the Government to license and control munitions makers, also has been reported out to the Senate.

Divorced From Former Ruler

Wife of George of Greece Abandons Hope of Restoration to Throne

BUCHAREST, Rumania, July 6 (AP).—Elizabeth of Hohenzollern, Princess of Rumania, today abandoned hope of restoration to the throne of Greece. She obtained a divorce from former King George. The capital heard whispers that she intends to marry her secretary and run a model farm.

Greece is to have a plebiscite in the fall on restoration of the monarchy.

Elizabeth and Alexander Ssanavy, tall, handsome, forty-year-old Greek, who served in the Czarist army during the Great War, have been on excellent terms for some time. Recently Ssanavy became court chamberlain and personal secretary to the former queen.

BUYS HUGE ESTATE
Friends say Elizabeth had farming in mind when she purchased an estate from Count Torosoncy, Hungarian magnate, near Timisoara, not so long ago. She reportedly paid $35,000,000 11c (about $35,000,000 for it).

These friends say the ex-queen intends to convert the magnificent estate into an experimental farm on the American model, and manage it with Ssanavy. The estate is the only place in Rumania where rice is grown.

It was announced Elizabeth would resume her old title of Elizabeth of Hohenzollern, Princess of Rumania.

IS ARRESTED FOR CALGARY ROBBERY

Man Held by San Diego Police For Theft of Jewelry Valued At $10,000

SAN DIEGO, Cal., July 6 (AP).—Arrested with jewelry valued at more than $10,000 in his possession, Lloyd M. Steeves, thirty-two, alias Douglas Williams, was held today for Calgary police for questioning regarding his alleged participation in a $10,000 gem robbery.

Part of the loot obtained from Steeves, Detective John Kane said, was identified through watch numbers and descriptions furnished by the Calgary police.

Steeves, Kane said, allegedly broke into the jewelry store of Henry Birks & Son, Ltd., on June 5.

Tourists in thousands are flocking to Mexico, and to accommodate them the Government is busy building new roads and widening others. Although road-building in the country is considerably difficult owing to the ruggedness of many parts of it, glorious views are to be obtained from the highways, especially those leading up to Mexico City, 7,000 feet above sea level, Dr. Cole stated.

Some 6,000 delegates to the world convention of Rotary, held recently in Mexico City, were royally entertained, the visiting physician said. Festas and various entertainments were provided for them.

THIS DOG IN THREE RIOTS

"Switch" Is Veteran Hitch-Hiker as Companion of Relief Striker

CALGARY, July 6 (AP).—Three riots and the same number of transcontinental rides on freight trains are just some of the things in which "Switch," eight-year-old female mongrel owned by J. McDonald, has taken part.

Cheated of a fourth-cross-country journey "on the rods" when the striking relief camp marchers were stopped at Regina, the little black and white dog today is travelling on the "cushions" for the first time during her career.

Official mascot for the on-to-Ottawa army, Switch is with McDonald on the Canadian Pacific Railway special train taking the marchers back to homes and camps.

McDonald, going through to Vancouver, says money couldn't buy Switch. The dog is never out of his sight.

OVERCOME BY GAS
McDonald and the dog were in the centre of things during the disturbance at Saskatoon. Exhibition grounds two years ago, took part in the relief campers' riot in a Vancouver department store recently and were right up on the firing line at Regina July 1. Switch came through all but the last unscathed. At Regina she was overcome by police tear gas.

McDonald has no trouble catching freights "on the fly" with his constant companion. He jumps the train and then catches the dog by the collar as she races alongside.

Switch has Vancouver and New Westminster dog licenses.

Louisiana House Passes Twenty-Six More Bills at Request of State Senator

BATON ROUGE, La., July 6 (AP).—Helpless anti-Long leaders today spoke bitter words and fought nameily, but Senator Huey P. Long's followers did his bidding, passed his twenty-six new bills in the House and rushed them to the Senate for final action.

The measures give the "Kingfish" almost unlimited powers, giving him control over every non-elective public job, big and little, in the state, and send to jail anyone who uses Federal relief money for political purposes.

ITALO-ETHIOPIAN TENSION

The major international complication now worrying the capitals of Europe, and, incidentally, Washington, is the strained relations between Italy and Ethiopia. The period of stress has prevailed since December last because of a series of frontier incidents, the chief one of which was the miniature battle staged at Wal-Wal. The situation is that the Ethiopian-Italian-Somali land boundary has never been accurately delimited. According to all maps, even Italian maps, Wal-Wal is anywhere from eighty to one hundred miles within Ethiopian territory. The incident at Wal-Wal, therefore, was one in which Ethiopia tried to elicit a hostile and armed force well within her own territory.

Italy now demands a protectorate over Ethiopia, and failing that being granted is willing to fight. Italy's hope is that a moral triumph will be won by the yielding of Ethiopia to a threat of overwhelming force. That, however, seems unlikely, and there is the possibility of hostilities ensuing that Italy will not find her task an easy one. Any mishap to Italian arms in a campaign of this character would place Italy in a very awkward situation in Europe. The risk is particularly grave, because Italy at present is in a precarious financial position.

The British and French Governments are perplexed over the situation. The mission of Mr. Anthony Eden to Rome failed in its purpose of ameliorating the Italian attitude. Dispatches have announced that France is willing to give Italy a free hand as regards Ethiopia. These are wholly erroneous since M. Laval, the Prime Minister, has given a categorical denial to these reports and has added that the thanks that France has received from the Ethiopian Emperor for efforts at mediation are sufficient disproof of the reports. Moreover, France and Great Britain stood together at Geneva in the hope of changing Italy's attitude.

The British Government is responsible for the Sudan, and in the event of an Italo-Ethiopian war it cannot allow Lake Tsana, the source of the Blue Nile, to fall into Italian hands. The fact is that Great Britain, more so than France, is keenly interested in preventing war, and the two nations are at one in their desire to find a way out of the impasse. It is possible that within the next few weeks the nations signatory to the Kellogg-Briand Pact will bring pressure to bear on Italy to observe the terms of that sanction. Since individual efforts of nations have failed to change the Italian attitude this seems the desirable course. It would, moreover, rescue the United States from a diplomatic dilemma because of the appeal made to that country by Ethiopia invoking the terms of the Kellogg-Briand Pact.

LIVING COMFORTABLY

That virile writer, Mr. Rudyard Kipling, has a habit of using challenging phrases. One of his latest summaries is a challenge from which no one may escape—the challenge of life itself—and this is how Mr. Kipling puts it: "There is a necessity laid upon man to justify himself to himself, in order that he may continue to live comfortably within himself." Here in a sentence is raised the question of what is the struggle on earth for, what is the nature of the end to which life points, what is the standard by which one and all will be tried? These are questions which would be answered variously by different persons, according to their conceptions. There are, however, very definite answers from which none may escape who makes an effort to view life as a whole. There are thoughts and determinations that go beyond the struggle for mere existence.

According to the capacities that are given to an individual there is the desire to exercise them and through that process to get something out of life. There is a purpose and a desire that is expressed in a restless striving. Most people if they were asked at what they were aiming would reply, happiness, but they would not be wholly right. Happiness does not imply what the goal is, for men and women are only happy when so absorbed in the end which they seek to achieve that they forget everything else; in other words, they forget trying to be happy. It is a matter of common record that those men and women who have left their mark on the history of the world never thought of their own happiness as their aim and purpose. It is, indeed, plainly evident in the record of human beings that the individual is forever throwing happiness away in the pursuit of something else. The road so often that must be followed is one of pain and sacrifice.

Is it achievement that is the end of life? It cannot be for all mankind save as it applies to the ordinary routine tasks. If achievement were the goal there is a large proportion of humanity hopelessly handicapped by little or only moderate ability, by sickness, by disability, by the force of circumstances, by misfortune, by lack of opportunity. Achievement on the material plane never reaches what it aims at; the ideal forever remains almost hopelessly beyond the reach. It is the law of life that what is regarded as the attainment of the fullest success is reserved for the few, and even for those chosen there is no goal of perfect achievement. They may attain much at which they have aimed and yet never have appreciated the true meaning of life.

It is only by realization that this life is never complete in itself that man can justify himself to himself; when he appreciates what Abt Volger said that we see "on earth the broken arcs"; the "perfect round" is elsewhere. Such realization is only possible through a personal religion and the inculcation of that spirit that endures life with a stoical calm and enjoys life with unflinching rest. Those who regard either happiness or achievement alone as the end to be sought have a habit of shirking the common burdens of life; they flinch because they fear they will bear the marks of the struggle; they dread they will lose more than they can keep; they will not do their duty in scorn of pleasure. Thus man may pursue the goal of happiness, or of achievement, or of both, and become a moral bankrupt on the road. That is the case where he fails to understand that in order to find himself he must lose himself in something or someone higher and nobler than himself. That whole doctrine is summed up by the Master Teacher when He said: "He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for My sake shall find it."

In the search for the meaning of life the answer must be found to fit, not the favored few, but all—the unfortunate, the weak, the unlearned, the privileged, the strong and the cultured. It would seem that answer might well be the attainment of personal worth and the building of character. That does not mean what a man may become worthy to God. This goal is within the reach of all, for where character is developed, where moral worth is achieved, it will endure and no one may take it away. It is those possessions, more than any other, that enable a man to live comfortably with himself, to justify himself to himself, for he has a good conscience towards God. Such a man has achieved the one kind of happiness that really matters because the true meaning of life has been fathomed. When he knows what moral worth means there is instantaneous obedience to the immutable law of righteousness. There is nothing contingent in the sovereignty of the moral law. If moral certitudes were dissolved there is nothing to take their place; for they are not ordained by the law of the State or the fashions of society. Man neither makes them nor controls them. They are as unalterable as the motions of the cosmic spheres; they are a part and parcel of the mystery of the Divine Sovereignty.

ENDLESS TALK

A future historian of present-day conditions may conceivably come to the conclusion that the increase of talking was one of the most significant phenomena of this age. That increase has been made possible because of some of the most prized inventions of the past few decades. The radio has been the principal medium. People are now listening to the sound of more human voices than they ever heard before, and are being treated to a pot pourri of opinions, irresponsible and otherwise, that has had the effect of bewildering their intelligence.

The present age has been a brilliant one in great scientific inventions. From a moral and political standpoint it has been largely sterile. Possibly this is due to the fact that people are given more time to talk and less time to think. There is something in the nature of a simultaneous roar of world conversations. In the din truth becomes submerged. Speech has the unhappy faculty of creating antagonisms, and the more there is of it the greater is the unrest promoted. The potentialities of the dissemination of the human voice are still by no means exhausted. It will continue to be spread over wider and larger areas. The prospect from a scientific standpoint has everything to commend it; from the moral and political standpoint it offers grave dangers. The time may come when an international convention may be desirable to put a limitation on microphones.

"I SHALL RETURN"

On some warm April night with Spring rain falling I shall come back to earth to walk again.
To know the beauty of a perfumed aloe,
A stillness broken by the dripping rain.
And I shall know that lilacs are in blossom
Beside the garden where their perfume sweet
Will ease the longing that had kept me restless,
Will end the gnawing hunger of defeat.

Wherever I may be when this is over,
It cannot hold me there with April's rain.
I shall come back to walk the earth's new gladness,
I shall return when lilacs bloom again.
—Bertha H. Guthrie, in "The Spinners."

Note and Comment

L. R. B. D.

We should be wary what persecution we raise against the living isobars of public men, how we shall that season life of man may thus be committed, sometimes a martyrdom.—Milton.

In one of the London illustrated journals there is a series of pictures of Admiral Lord Nelson, who, before carrying his fleet into the Battle of Trafalgar, smashing the French fleet and crushing the ambitions of Napoleon, signalled that on an eventful day England expected every man to do his duty. Looking at the pictures, we noted the frailty of the frame and the strength of the face of the heroic savior of his country. But Nelson appears to have had one besetting weakness. There was a strain of vanity in his cosmos. In his way Nelson was a dandy, without being what in his day would have been called an exquisite. He was vain of his uniform and the orders with which it had been decorated by his sovereign.

In the fighting forces of the nations of those days there were sharpshooters, which in modern days are called snipers. The great Admiral paced the deck of the Victory during the Battle of Trafalgar in full uniform ablaze with all his orders. Hardy is said to have remonstrated with his chief about this display, pointing out that the (the Admiral) thus became a shining mark for the enemy sharpshooters posted in the rigging of the French ships. The advice of a captain who was discreet as well as brave was not taken. A bullet from a French sharpshooter found its destined billet, and almost the last words of the immortal Admiral were: "They have got me at last, Hardy."

We suppose there have been sharpshooters in all armies ever since the evil day when men first began to practice the art of war. David was the first sharpshooter of renown, according to the sacred records, but professors learned in languages of living and dead nations may have read about others. The champion of the Israelites used a sling as a weapon of propulsion and a stone as his ammunition. Goliath was a prominent if he was not a shining mark. Confusion seized the Philistine host when his champion fell with a pebble from a brook in his head. During the progress of the Great War there were sharpshooters, but the term sharpshooter was changed to sniper, probably because sniping implied an element of sneaking, and no doubt the sniper was instructed to pick out as his victims soldiers who were conspicuous as active combatants or leaders.

There is a tremendous volume of peace propaganda surging through the haunts of mankind these days, but it is today as it ever has been. There is no peace. We believe he was a poet or singer who sighed for the wings of a dove so that he could fly away and be at either rest or peace. We remember one harassed editor who frequently declared that he would run away from the trials and tribulations of his vocation. If we were a statesman in Canada during these troublous times, we should be tempted to exclaim, confound your knavish tricks; to frustrate your petty politics, we shall take the wings of an airplane and soar away into the realms of the blessed where party animosities are either unknown or anathema.

We believe it must be a sign of weakness in any man, except, of course, a professional politician, when he seeks the suffrages of the intelligent electorate these days. Great a leader palpably makes great sacrifices; including possibly the final sacrifice of his health, in the service of his country, with no possible commensurate reward except a sense of having done his duty, and finds himself surrounded by snipers determined to "get him," to the temptation to fly away and be at rest must be almost irresistible. In desperation the Germans resorted to illegitimate and detestable methods of warfare in order to avert defeat. In political warfare there may be illegitimate as well as legitimate tactics.

In Canada there is an important political battle pending within a month or two. A Conservative Government is on the defensive. The leader of the Government is a conspicuous figure, and the snipers have concentrated their fire upon him. The Prime Minister has been defending the citadel at Ottawa against the snipers and raiders of the provinces, who have exhausted the resources of their own treasuries, and hope to install in power a Government which will be less vigilant in its guard over the strong box.

The Federal Government has handed out many millions of dollars to the provincial governments in order to save their credit and the credit of the Dominion. All the provinces have their snipers in action. A splintering fire is being directed against the head of the Government. The snipers have their orders to get Bennett, on the belief (probably a delusion) that if the political assassin gets him their chiefs will get more. There is a crisis in the affairs of Canada. A strong Government may go out and a weak Government come in; but a weak leader is often a stubborn defender, and Mr. King has given no promise of submission to the spoilers.

Using What for Targets
Fully realizing that the young rifle shots of today are the Balesy shots of tomorrow, the executive council of the British Columbia Rifle Association have, this year, added matches to the official programme for "green" marksmen, marksmen who have not competed in a national, Dominion, or provincial meet. Such action should be commended. If we are to have good marksmen in the future, the time to encourage them is now, when they are learning the game, and not when they have given up, in despair. Good work officials of the B.C.R.A. your wise judgment in adding the "green" matches was undoubtedly proved official to the future of rifle shooting in British Columbia.—S.T.

Here's Alex's Selection
Was chatting with Grover Cleveland Alexander, former National League pitching star, the other evening at the Royal Athletic Park, where he is located to coach the Victoria team of the Victoria baseball squad. The topic, of course, was baseball. I asked him to name an all-time big league ball squad, and he did after hesitating a few minutes. Here it is: Hal Chase, first; Eddie Collins, second; Hans Wagner, third; Jimmy Collins, third; first Speaker, rightfield; Ty Cobb, centerfield; Babe Ruth, leftfield; Christy Mathewson, Walter Johnson, Rube Waddell and Bob Grove, pitchers. Jimmy King, Ray Schalk and Mickey Cochrane, catchers. "Do you know Hal Chase played for Victoria about thirty years ago?" I said to Alexander. "Is that right? Well, you can tell Victorians he was the sweetest first baseman ever to perform in the majors. The greatest fielding sacker to guard that position. John McGraw never worried about bad throws to first when Hal was there," stated the old master as he went out to hit balls to the infield.

Why Not Dynamite Bertie?
Broad Street Bertie is annoyed again. About the only time we see Bertie nowadays is when he is trying to shake a grumble. He says he hasn't been mentioned for weeks, and is afraid he'll be dropped from the social register. He tells us he has been working on a new invention to keep flies off society dogs by using electricity. He thinks there's something wrong with his "disintegrator gadget," as both mediums of experiment were shocked to death. He'll try nitric acid. Bertie was always like that—kind and gentle.—R.A.O.

One man in Esquimalt has a fine scheme to insure his three boys of securing relief. He petitioned the council asking they be allowed relief without going into camps. He stated they refused to go into the camps and he supported them. However, should the council not grant this concession, then, he wrote, he would advise the three young men to get married and then "you will have to give them married men's relief."—W.J.H.

Distasteful Fields Look Greener
Beer bibblers become bewitched because bottled beverages become better by being brought by brewers by barge to Victoria and Vancouver, which is just another reason why the old adage of "carrying coal to Newcastle" will have to be changed soon. For some inexplicable reason, Victoria bibblers think Vancouver-made lager is better than Victoria's, while Vancouver bibblers think Victoria's is better. Consequently heavy shipments of Victoria beer have to be sent to Vancouver, and the Terminal City responds by sending snowdrifts of beer to the capital. An unbiased observer, however, has failed to determine yet just what the difference is. The same thing exists among motorists, who think Eastern oil is better for their engines, while Eastern motorists think Western oil is the better product. It would seem, however, that the preference is merely an attitude of mind.—P.C.R.

Preparedness Parade
The other afternoon a lady was walking along the Causeway wearing a fur coat while under her arm she carried a Summer coat.

Evidently she wasn't taking any chances on the weather, which, for the past few days hasn't been any too good. However, it seems that the lady was hoping for a change in the weather and if it came she was already prepared.—S.K.M.

A. W. Neill, Independent member for Comox-Alberni, knows how to get home from Ottawa, but he is not quite so sure that he knows how to get back. On Friday members of Parliament enjoyed themselves singing "Show-Me-the-Way-to-Go-Home," while House and Senate leaders conferred over a knotty bit of legislation just before prorogation. Then Mr. Neill formally suggested that the members show him "how to come back." The Canadian Press reports. Waterfront Facilities
Sir,—Praise and letters of gratitude have just been offered the service club which built the windproof shelter so much needed on one of our points.

I should like to offer to the city fathers, to the service club or to our Tourist Trade Development Association a suggestion for another small improvement which I consider even more essential. Along the stretch of waterfront from the little Covey shore, the shelter is located to Dover Point where the lifeboat station stands a stretch of almost a mile to the water's edge. There is no descent where a mother can safely take small children down to the beach. Having attempted this feat at various points with a twenty-pound infant on one arm and a four-year-old by the hand, I know its dangers and difficulties.

There was once a wooden stair on its becoming unsafe, the city repaired the bottom half rather than repair it. There used to be a number of staircases of hammered iron beams, made by worthy citizens. The best of all these were washed out two years ago in an exceptionally rainy winter. The last ten or fifteen feet of them have since remained a messy slide of clay, gravel and debris. A sturdy butler who, besides owning a section of land on the Prairie, came three weeks ago prepared to put $10,000 in rural property here, and who favored my place for a few thousand, has withdrawn, stating he has decided to buy elsewhere where there are better opportunities.

Some of us refuse to be discouraged by any rumors that Great Britain may not absorb our canned loganberries advantageously to us. True we are told many firms there prefer not to buy through an agent, but we are informed on good authority are prepared to buy direct from us through our brokers. We must prove to the British public that our loganberries are superior to theirs and revive their appetites for loganberries, which has been said to be killed after eating their home-grown loganberries.

We have three Prairie provinces, where practically no fruit is grown, which could absorb our output. They have many institutions using large quantities of canned fruit. They are fond of our canned loganberries and loganberry juice to quench their thirst in the hot, dry harvest season.

Contrary to the reports that we cannot sell our loganberries, the facts are that every pound of loganberries we can send into our association will be marketed to fair advantage. Besides the many tons the wineries will absorb at 6 cents a pound, every pound of berries we can send in is being canned and sold to the British market, or being sold by the ton to other wineries here at a fair price. The No. 2s will be dehydrated.

Regarding raspberry winter killing, which was spoken of by a reporter in a paper recently, it is only the Cuthberts which will kill the raspberries, and if we substitute these, other varieties which remain dormant over the winter, we shall have a way of bearing a Fall crop sometimes on the new canes, and if the winter frost catches them at a certain stage, they may not bear a crop again in the Spring. Of the acre of raspberries of six varieties, the Cuthberts only show winter damage.

Let us keep our courage and instead of being discouraged by many knocking our industries, let us devise ways of overcoming our obstacles as we have always done and we shall win out. We were assured there was a good market in Britain for our loganberries. Why this sudden change of opinion? We still think there is, though they prefer to buy direct. MR. McTAVISH, Royal Oak P.O., Saanich, B.C., July 5, 1935.

Sir—Those of us who have property for sale, and take kindly to the pessimistic view of the loganberry crop outlook and the marketing of the fruit, and if there is something we can do to eliminate the pessimistic rumors regarding the industry and marketing of the fruit, it is important to do so.

I would invite reporters, who wrote extremely pessimistic articles in newspapers, to inspect my loganberry plantation between Central

POPE HOLDING ADVANCED AGE

Still Works With Vigor but Abandons Some Vatican
Customs

VATICAN CITY, July 6 (AP)—Pope Pius, who has entered his seventy-ninth year, has just made the important decision to conserve his strength in every way possible, in order to give himself more years of usefulness.

He has now ordered the abandonment of his old custom of going from one kneeling pilgrim to another, extending his papal ring for them to kiss.

His pontificate is already one of the longest on record, since of the 261 popes only thirty-seven reached or surpassed the length of the present one.

USING AUTOMOBILE.
His Holiness has given up completely his former custom of walking in the Vatican gardens. He goes there only by automobile, and even then only occasionally.

The oldest side of this picture is Pope Pius' mental vigor and unswerving will. His workday would honor a man fifty-five years his junior.

Even on his seventy-eighth birthday he refused to let up, but received two archbishops, five bishops, four monsignors, a mother general of the Ursuline Order, the Egyptian minister and several hundred pilgrims, besides listening to reports of his secretaries, dictating letters, making a dozen decisions, and performing many other duties of his complicated office.

East Rites Conducted For George R. Harris

A large number of friends attended the funeral of the late George R. Harris, which took place on Saturday afternoon at Metropolitan United Church. Rev. W. J. Sippell, D.D., assisted by Rev. James Hood, conducted the service, during which the hymns "Give Me the Wings of Faith to Rise," and "Abide With Me," were sung. "When the Roll Is Called Up Yonder," was also sung as a solo by Frank Tupman.

Interment was made in the family plot at Ross Bay Cemetery, with the following as pallbearers: S. Harris, A. B. Jones, S. MacGowan, J. Scott, F. Savage and C. E. Sonley.

MANY COMING TO CONCLAVE

J. W. deB. Farris, K.C., To Preside at Law Society
Gathering Here

J. W. deB. FARRIS, K.C.

The annual meeting of the Law Society of British Columbia will open in the Empress Hotel tomorrow and it is expected that the attendance will be larger than was at first expected. Yesterday, members of the legal profession and their wives began to arrive for the event, and the information they brought was that there will be a very representative gathering for the meeting in the capital from all parts of the province.

Arrangements made by the committee in charge provide for the commencing of the registration in the Empress Hotel at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning, after which the convention will get down to business, starting the first session in the ballroom at 10 o'clock, with the president, J. W. deB. Farris, K.C., of Vancouver, in the chair.

In addition to the members of the profession, all the judges of the province have been invited to attend, and it is expected that a number of them will be in the city for the gathering.

EXPECTS BENEFITS
Following up the programme that was entered upon last year at the meeting of the society, Frank Higgins, K.C., president of the Victoria Bar Association, holds out the hope that there will be a continuation of the plan then initiated for the extending of some measures of relief to the general public by the legal profession.

Mr. Higgins says that the members of the profession are very ready to take their part in assisting in every way possible in tiding over the present trying times through which the general public in common with the legal profession are passing. He hopes, therefore, to see very much good come from the meetings next week.

The ballroom of the Empress Hotel will be the meeting place for the society during its sessions in the city.

CROWD ENJOYS BAND CONCERT

Popular Programme Given
By 16th Canadian Scottish Musicians

The Summer series of evening band concerts in the Inner Harbor was inaugurated last evening under the most propitious conditions. Bandmaster J. M. Miller and his thirty scarlet-uniformed and kilted instrumentalists of the 16th Canadian Scottish band were given a most enthusiastic reception by an audience that rimmed the full length of Belleville Street, between Government Street and the C.P.R. dock.

The programme was of most acceptably popular character, and at the same time displayed fine musicianship on the part of the players and their conductor. The instruments were in perfect pitch, and their tone had splendid carrying power, people seated, even as far away as the Empress Hotel balcony reporting that they could hear the music quite clearly.

POPULAR NUMBERS
An outstandingly fine selection was the overture music of "Hungarian Comedy," in which the playing of the ten clarinets was conspicuously beautiful, although the bright and spirited character of the whole number made it a great favorite. Another particularly popular number was "Reminiscences of the Plantation," a musical medley introducing such well-known melodies as "Kentucky Home," "Swanee River," "Old Folks at Home," "Old Black Joe," "Dixie," "Massa's in the Cold Ground," and other gay or plaintive tunes.

Bandman James Mossop gave a beautiful performance on the cornet in playing "Sunshine of Your Smile" (Dicks), and as an encore to the prolonged applause, "Garden of Tomorrow." The timbre of this instrument is particularly suited to outdoor concert conditions, and Bandman Mossop showed both splendid technique and excellent interpretative abilities.

"DESERT SONG"

A well-woven collection of favorite melodies from Rumburg's popular screen opera, "Desert Song," made another excellent addition to the programme, while a well-arranged selection of English standard songs, assembled by Ord Hume, was enjoyed.

Lesser numbers included the gay set of waltzes entitled "Jolly Fellows" (Volstead), and the tuneful Neapolitan serenade, "La Poloma," featuring two corsets, played by Bandmen Mossop and MacKenzie.

The programme opened with a rousing fanfare of trumpets and trombones, which quickly knit the peripatetic audience together, and the appropriately named "Community Spirit" march, by Goldman, famous bandmaster of the Goldman band, inaugurated the band's Summer programme.

along the Siberia-Manchukuo frontier.

ENTIRELY UNWARRANTED

A note which Chan Kai-shek, head of the Manchukuo Foreign Ministry, and high Japanese army officers handed July 4 to the Mongolian section of the mixed Mongol-Manchukuo committee studying the border incidents contained the demands, the Mongolian communiqué said, it called them "entirely unwarranted" and "intolerable."

The Japanese army, Mongolia announced, asked the right of permanent residence for military observers, the right for them to move about freely and keep contact with Manchukuo, and permission to run telegraph lines into Mongolia to facilitate this communication.

Failing Mongolia's compliance, the communiqué asserted, Japan threatened to demilitarize much of the eastern section of Mongolia by forcing the withdrawal of Mongolian troops.

CAMBRIDGE IN CUP VICTORY

Takes Henley Cup for First Time in History at Big Regatta

HENLEY, England, July 6 (P)—Prime Minister and Mrs. Baldwin saw Cambridge University win the Henley Cup for the first time in history today.

Going to the front as the stroke of the Leander Club slipped off his slide at the first stroke in the race, Pembroke College, Cambridge, took a lead of three lengths and won in the fast time of 6:53.

Pembroke's second boat, just failed to win the Thames Challenge Cup, retained by London. The winners, timed at 7:05, were only a quarter of a length to the good.

The Zurich, Switzerland, crew, one of the finest ever seen at Henley, will take the Stewards' Cup to the Continent for the first time. They won by three lengths from London in 1914, breaking the old record by ten seconds.

Another Swiss victory was registered in the Diamond Sculls when Ruffi beat Zavrel, of Czechoslovakia, by three and a half lengths in 8:15. The Ladies Plate and Viscount Cup goblets all went to Cambridge. Reading University retained the Wyfold Cup, beating Thames.

WALLY MARTIN QUEBEC CHAMP

Defeats Ross Wilson for Tennis Title in East—Mrs. Patrick Wins

MONTREAL, July 6 (P)—Big Walter Martin, Toronto, veteran Davis Cup player and holder of numerous titles, today captured the Province of Quebec's tennis championship when he defeated Ross Wilson, also of Toronto, in four sets. The scores were 2-6, 6-3, 6-2, 9-7.

The title was undefended this year by Bobby Murray, of Montreal, who was at the famous Wimbledon tennis championships in London.

In the women's singles title match, Mrs. W. T. Patrick, of Montreal, successfully defended her crown by defeating Miss Claire Walsh, young Toronto star, in straight sets 6-4, 8-6.

Miss Walsh was handicapped by her lack of experience and the Montrealer won easily, seeming to have the knack of placing her shots almost at will.

Ross Wilson and Grant McLean, both of Toronto, won the men's doubles championship when they beat Henri-Paul Emond and Stuart Vessey, Montrealeers, 6-2, 6-3, 7-5.

The women's doubles crown went to Mrs. Patrick, Montreal, and Miss Diana Pope, of London, Ont., when they scored a straight-set victory over Miss W. Chisholm and Miss V. Little, both of Montreal. The score was 7-5, 6-4.

Couple to Reside in California

The wedding took place quietly yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock of Gwendolyn Mary, elder daughter of Mrs. E. L. Richards of Victoria, and Mr. John E. Nicholson, of Pittsburg, Calif., youngest son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Allan Nicholson, of Victoria. Rev. C. B. Switzer, D.D., performed the ceremony in Oak Bay United Church, which was decorated with an assortment of Summer flowers with charming effect. The organist, Mr. H. Hollins, played the wedding marches.

The bride, who was given in marriage by Mr. A. B. McNeill, wore a frock of white georgette with a full skirt slightly en train, and a tulle veil arranged to her head with a cluster of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of orchids, roses and lilies of the valley.

Her sister, Miss Flora Richards, was the only bridesmaid, who wore a pretty frock of pale pink georgette and a matching hat, and carried a bouquet of sweet peas, tiny blue delphiniums and gypsophila and pink roses.

A small reception of relatives and a few close friends was held after the service at the home of the bridegroom's brother-in-law, and sister, Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Scriven, Oak Bay Avenue, where the floral decorations were carried out with quantities of blue delphiniums and pink roses.

Mrs. Richards welcomed the guests, and she wore a smart gown of black chiffon velvet and a black hat and a corsage bouquet of pink roses and lilies of the valley. The tea table was arranged with pink candles and vases of sweet peas, tiny blue delphiniums and gypsophila and was centered with the wedding cake.

Mr. and Mrs. Nicholson left during the afternoon for a motoring trip on the Island, and will later make their home in California. The bride went away in a smart white wool sports suit and white accessories.

Church Wedding Unites Teachers in Marriage

Miss Edna Pearmain Becomes Bride of Mr. Ralph Thomas Amid Pretty Setting—Will Make Home in Vancouver

The First Baptist Church was the scene of a pretty wedding last night at 8:30 o'clock when Rev. G. A. Reynolds united in marriage Edna, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Pearmain, 3761 Craigmillar Avenue, and Mr. Ralph Thomas, second son of Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Thomas, of Port Moody.

Three Gothic arches, shaded from deep blue through mauve to pink and white, spanned the aisle, those at the sides being flanked with baskets of flowers. Mr. Oliver Stuart presided at the organ, and during the service played "O Perfect Love" and as the register was being signed, accompanied Miss Freda Spencer, who sang "At Dawning."

BRIDE AND ATTENDANTS

The bride, who was given away by her father, looked lovely in a form-fitting frock, with a slight train, of white satin. It was fastened down the back, and had long tight sleeves and a cowl neckline. Her veil of embroidered lace was attached to a beaded cap, and was worn with three strands of orange blossoms across her brow, and was gathered into the back of her neck with a single strand and formed a long train. She carried a shower bouquet of Officiella roses.

Miss Evelyn Thomas, sister of the groom, was the only bridesmaid, and wore a charming frock of peach tulle with a close-fitting bodice and a skirt made very full below the hips. It was worn with a shoulder cape fastened at the throat, and a dainty Nile green tulle hat tied with green ribbon at the back, and trimmed with flat flowers in shades of peach and green. She carried a bouquet of roses and carnations.

Acting as flower-girls were Trudith and Edith McGill in Kate Greenaway frocks of Nile green tulle and tiny flat hats of peach tulle worn with their heads and trimmed with roses. They carried Victorian bouquets of mixed flowers. Mr. William Lucas, of Vancouver, was the best man, and the ushers were Mr. Dan Pearmain and Mr. Reuben Nesbitt.

LARGE RECEPTION

A large reception was held after the ceremony in the New Thought Hall, where the decorations were carried out in peach and green. Mrs. Pearmain wore for the occasion a

Tangled Love

CHAPTER XIII
When Noel walked down the beach and various people spoke to her, she knew they were thinking, "There's Noel. Poor kid. She's having tough sledding, all right. Nobody in the world but Elinor . . . you know Elinor."

Stephen and Deems were waiting for her.
"How was the ride?" Deems asked, looking almost as young as his son. "I used to get up and ride in my younger days. You two youngsters take a swim. It's a big choppy out there for me this morning. I'm all in."

"Scott's coming down tomorrow night and we're going to have a little party," said Stephen. "Oh, nothing elaborate. Your aunt said she was going to give you one. This is your party, Noel."

"From what I've heard," said Deems, "your aunt didn't live long enough to know you." If she had, things might have been different. "It's better that they are this way," she said. "But, a party for me? What'll I have to do? I've never been a guest of honor before. Are Ned and Linda coming?"

"One question at a time," said Stephen, tossing his cigarette away. "You don't have to do anything but be yourself. Borrow one of Elinor's dresses and show everybody how good looking you are. Nobody on the island knows you except on the diving board."

"Ned and Linda are coming of course," said Deems, smiling at her. "They're coming down with Scott."

She nodded and walked slowly to the water's edge. She was thinking that tomorrow night after the party she must tell them her decision to get a job. It would take her away, but it had to be like that. There was no other way.

The party was in full swing. From the valley below the lights from the Spanish villa shone like friendly beacons. Music floated out on the warm night air. There was movement everywhere, the graceful movements of lovely girls in sheer evening dresses that swept the floor, and young men in the conventional black and white.

Noel had never looked lovelier than in the dress of gold she wore tonight that matched the warm glow of her skin. People there who remembered her as the brown girl in a bathing suit, a slim little girl inclined to gravity, were surprised. And the bright sparkling girls of the island colony wondered if styles in women were changing. Noel in her close-fitting dress of gold was not sparkling, but as she danced every man in the room was conscious of her, conscious of her dark hair that fitted so snugly against her head and curled impudently at the ends, her scarlet mouth that smiled so gravely, and the flowing grace of her body.

Scott cut in. "Have you seen Elinor?" he asked. "She's disappeared. Noel, you look lovely tonight. What have you done to yourself?"

"It's only the dress and Elinor's lip-stick and her exotic perfume and gold sandals. I've never been so dressed up before."

"It becomes you, but I like the Noel in her little sport clothes best. But I'm the only one. This is your coming-out party and after tonight Stephen's telephone is going to be busy."

"I don't think so," said Noel. The lights in the ballroom were dim. Noel in her arms, in the casual embrace of dancing, closed her eyes, wanting to shut out all else but the music and the feeling of being close to him again. Had she the right to feel this way toward the man her sister was going to marry? But no one knew; no one would ever know. Even after Scott married Elinor and she, Noel, was with him, she would always feel this way. "Loving him makes it impossible for me to love anyone else."

When the music ended, she left him and went to look for Elinor. The patio was filled with young couples, the end of their cigarettes a glowing red in the darkness. There was low laughter and the tinkling of glasses. The house seemed filled to overflowing. Elinor was not in the ballroom nor in the music-room.

Noel went upstairs. In Elinor's room she found her.
"Scott is looking for you."

Elinor powdered her nose. "It's no fun being engaged," she said with a shrug, "or rather, it's no fun going to a party when you're engaged. It's like being a wallflower. None of the men have paid the slightest bit of attention to me, and they used to cut in all the time."

Noel laughed. "That's childish. One can't be a debutante forever. There's always a new crop of girls every year. Everybody marries and raises a family. It's a cycle."

"You were never popular," said Elinor. "You don't know what this is."

"Come down. Scott is waiting."

When both sisters appeared at the top of the stairs, Scott looked up. He never saw them together that he didn't compare them. Elinor, in a dress of flowered material, regal and blonde, with a petulant, sulky mouth. Noel in a dress of dull gold and gold sandals and a smiling red mouth.

"I found her," Noel said. "Delivered in person."

She left them and joined Stephen. Deems, talking with Linda and Ned, saw them dance together. Noel's cool charm and air of indifference fascinated him. She was so unaccountably lovely tonight. Not so decorative as Elinor, but infinitely more interesting. If only his son could love her! But Noel would care nothing for his money. Noel would just go on being Noel in her quiet little way.

"Doesn't she look lovely tonight?" Linda asked, looking lovely herself. "Noel isn't self-conscious. She never thinks about herself and yet she has more charm than women who spend all their time on themselves."

It won't cost much living with Linda.

"Noel is right," said Deems, "although we don't want her to go." He thought of her in a humdrum office, her head bent over a desk, her fingers busy. He thought of hurried lunches at a drugstore counter, of dinners in restaurants, and of a lonely walk back to a dingy apartment. While Elinor would continue to breakfast in bed and spend her lazy days in idleness. Why couldn't Scott and Stephen see the fitness of this girl and the shallowness of her sister?

"I'll miss you terribly," Stephen said. "Nobody to swim with."

A thought occurred to Elinor that took the weary look from her face. She got up, looked at Noel, and said: "I know you're going! You want to live in the same house with Scott!"

Linda opened the door. There stood Noel with the same old suitcase. "Why, darling, embracing her, come in! What—"

"I've just come back again. It seems as though I'm always packing and unpacking. I'm going to look for a job."

Linda shook her red head. "Do you mean to say that Elinor with her income has made no provision for you?" she asked, wiping her hands on her smock.

"She's going to get married in the fall," putting down the old suitcase. "She'll need money to buy things." Things she doesn't need, said Linda. Noel pulled off her hat and shook her hair loose.

"Was there a scene when you left?" Linda asked.

"Last night," said Noel, "she accused me of wanting to live in the same house with Scott. That's the first time she ever hinted at that."

"You still love him, Noel?"

"Yes, simply, but I didn't come here just to be near him. I know that . . . that's futile. Do you mind if I camp here until I find a typist?"

"Camping is correct," said Linda. "I love to have you. But what a comparison after Stephen's house!"

"I have never," said Noel, "liked to breakfast in bed. I had the opportunity," but didn't consider it. Tomorrow morning I'm going to buy a paper and see if some man doesn't want a typist."

Relies on Women in Movie Reform

MADRID (AP).—The Catholic Church, opening a vigorous campaign against "immoral" movies in Spain, regards the influence of Catholic women as its greatest single weapon in the clean-up.

It has bestowed its blessing upon a national Catholic feminist organization called the Juventud Feminina, charging it to remove what Pape Nuncio Tedeschini termed "the pernicious cancer of obscenity" from moving pictures.

A week was set aside as "purification week," during which appeals were directed to Spanish women by high church authorities to "redeem the moving picture theatre, make it a wholesome place for our youth and thus render an incalculable service to humanity."

FEDERAL FIELD TO BE COVERED

C.C.F. Will Be Well Represented Over Dominion, Says Candidate

With the exception of the Maritime Provinces, C.C.F. candidates will be fairly well represented in all other constituencies throughout the Dominion in the forthcoming Federal election, Professor King Gordon, C.C.F. candidate for Victoria, stated on his arrival here from Montreal yesterday morning.

Some eight or ten candidates already have been named in Quebec, while candidates will be placed in all constituencies in Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, he asserted. "We will have enough candidates in the field to secure control of the Dominion House if they are elected," Dr. Gordon said.

SPONTANEOUS GROWTH
Asked why the Maritime Provinces were not making any determined effort to put C.C.F. candidates in the field, Dr. Gordon explained that the C.C.F. had gained amazing strength from a spontaneous growth, and had been the lack of organization at the start. The organization had followed the gathering, together with supporters of the movement. Hence, no effort had been made so far to organize in the Maritimes.

While the scope of the C.C.F. policies lay chiefly in the Federal field, Dr. Gordon did not deprecate the work carried out provincially, contending that while the work of the party was limited in the provinces, there, nevertheless, were C.C.F. policies that could be carried out within the confines of the province, just as the Labor party had been able to do municipally in England.

COMMENTS ON RIOT
Commenting on the Regina riot, Dr. Gordon said it was a terrible thing that young men, who had been promised work and wages, and been told that this was a young man's country, should find such demoralizing conditions in the relief camp, and then be denied the privilege of all free-thinking people to present in a peaceful way their demands to the Government.

"The Regina riot is a result of a Government that refuses to recognize that there is a real cause to meet, and that nothing can be accomplished by force, or the suppression of expressions of opinion," Dr. Gordon declared.

SOCIAL EVOLUTION
The candidate then went on to discuss economic problems, and outlined how the C.C.F. proposed to gradually bring about a social state by a process of evolution. State health insurance, unemployment insurance, adequate old age pensions, legislative control of industries so as to improve distribution of the necessities of life, provide more employment, and overcome monopolization of wealth.

He could see no solution of the present economic troubles in the United States experiment. The NRA, he declared, was merely accentuating the economic problems. It manufactured more purchasing power so that monopolized wealth could monopolize more wealth. The concentration of riches into the hands of a few had to be done away with, he contended, before unemployment could be solved.

PRIZE REFLECTS TEXTILE GROWTH

LEEDS, England (AP).—W. T. Astbury, lecturer in textile physics at Leeds University, has been awarded the Acetion Prize, approximately $500, by the Royal Institution for the best essay illustrative of "the wisdom and beneficence of the Almighty in some department of science."

It was founded in 1838 and has been awarded every seven years to some of the most distinguished scientists in this and other countries. It was awarded to Sir William Huggins in 1900 and Mrs. E. M. Langford in 1927, and has now been won by Sir Charles Sherrington and Dr. A. V. W. The Astbury paper reported X-ray textile studies.

That Body of Yours
(By James W. Barton, M.D.)
THE BODY NEEDS ANIMAL PROTEIN—MEAT OR EGGS
Those who advocate "going back to Nature" and believe that raw uncooked foods are most suitable for man, should remember that man's earliest food was meat; he got the grasses and vegetables later, when he found that they were more easily obtained than by having to hunt animals for food. He still continued to eat meat, but found that the grasses and vegetables made a better all-round diet for him.

Professor Bickel, before the Berlin Medical Society, pointed out that in primitive or early man a mixed form of nutrition, such as corresponds to the nature of a man, has always been in the foreground. A one-sided nutrition, when found, is nearly always due to circumstances, or, in other words, is forced. An exclusive diet of raw foods cannot be regarded as a "natural" diet. For the best nutrition vegetable protein—peas, beans—must always be supplemented or helped out by animal protein—meat or eggs.

It has been found that when not enough animal protein is being used the combustion or burning-up processes are not as active, as animal proteins stimulate the processes to action more than other foods. And it has been learned also that when more animal proteins—meat or eggs—are used than is absolutely necessary the processes reach the proper rate and do not go beyond it.

If animals or human beings are nourished with vegetable proteins only, such nutrition is of poor quality and the increase in body weight will be below normal; there will be less resistance to infections, and the "nutrient balance" will also be below normal.

Our nutrition experts, who work out their diets on thousands of men, women and children under varying conditions, advise that the average adult, doing light work, should use one part meat or eggs to two parts fats—cream, butter, fat marg., to four parts vegetables.

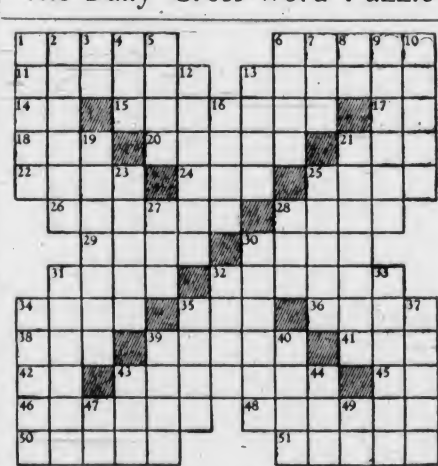

Growing children or men and women who work hard physically need more meat and eggs in proportion to fats and vegetables to increase growth and repair worn tissues, respectively.

length of its body. An animal that eats meat only, such as the dog, has an intestine just three times the length of its body. Therefore man, whose intestine is about five times the length of his body, should eat both meat and vegetables, as his intestine is much shorter in proportion to the cow and longer in proportion to the dog.

Our nutrition experts, who work out their diets on thousands of men, women and children under varying conditions, advise that the average adult, doing light work, should use one part meat or eggs to two parts fats—cream, butter, fat marg., to four parts vegetables.

Miss Agnes Kennedy Wed Married Quietly at Anyox To Mr. Stanley Rickinson

First United Church was filled with friends of the bride and groom last night for the wedding of Agnes, only daughter of Mrs. A. Kennedy, 1118 Pandora Avenue, and Mr. Stanley Rickinson, second son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Rickinson, 639 Wilson Street. Rev. W. G. Wilson, D.D., performed the ceremony, and Mr. Alfred Gifford played the wedding march and accompanied Mrs. Kennedy, who, with violin obligato by Miss Connie Loring, sang "Love's Coronation" as the registry was being signed.

Masses of lilies and roses were used in decoration of the church, and three archways, dressed with roses and syringa, flanked the altar. During the service, the bride and groom stood beneath the central arch, from which was suspended a large white bell.

The bride was given away by her uncle, Mr. William Kennedy, who wore a lovely gown of white silk net over tulle, and a small train. Her veil of embroidered silk net was arranged with a bouquet of orange blossoms, and carried a train, and she carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses, lilies of the valley and swansons.

THREE ATTENDANTS
Miss Verna Teague, of Nanaimo, was maid of honor in a pretty frock of pale pink organza with a light bodice and skirt flared fully below the knees, and this was worn with a tiny jacket with full puff sleeves, and a large off-the-face hat of pink mohair. She carried an arm bouquet of carnations, ranunculus and sweet peas. The bridesmaids were Miss Dorthy Pattullo in pale yellow organza, and Miss Iris Couch in pale green. Their gowns were fashioned alike, with long flared skirts and flilly capes, and they wore bouquets to match their frocks, and carried colonial bouquets of pink and mauve sweet peas, enchanter's carnations and Columbia roses.

Mr. Thomas Rickinson supported his brother, and the ushers were Mr. Ray Rickinson and Mr. Fred Scafe. A reception was held after the service in the Macabees Hall, which was bright with flowers. The bride and groom stood beneath an archway decked with roses to receive their friends, who were welcomed on arrival by Mrs. Kennedy. She was dressed in a gown of pale yellow floral taffeta and a matching hat, and wore a corsage bouquet of roses and sweet peas. A four-tiered cake centred the supper table, which was arranged with vases of sweet peas.

Mr. and Mrs. Rickinson left at midnight aboard the S.S. Ruth Alexander for San Diego, the bride traveling in a Nile green suit, pale yellow hat trimmed with green and yellow accessories. After their honeymoon they will make their home in White Horse.

Skin Beauty doesn't end at the shoulders

Today's beauty rule is—have a "schoolgirl complexion" all over.

FASHIONS force you into it! Dresses, hosiery, bathing suits are so revealing—it's important to keep your whole body smooth and lovely just as you do your face, neck and shoulders. Use the Palmolive method! Let the rich, velvety lather of Palmolive keep your skin soft and beautiful from head to toe.

Try this Beauty Bath
Massage your whole body with a washcloth filled with soothing, gentle Palmolive lather. Cleanse the pores thoroughly. Rinse completely and finish with a dash of cool water. This simple beauty bath leaves your skin soft and lovely—glowing with youth! And it's so cooling and comfortable these summer days.

Palmolive Soap is made from a secret blend of olive and palm oils—nature's beauty oils. The experience of millions of women has proven that Palmolive Soap brings new freshness and youth to the skin. Let it do so for you—not only to your face, neck, shoulders, but to your entire body. Be "schoolgirl complexion" all over.

And of course, you'll keep on giving your face, throat and shoulders their daily Palmolive beauty treatment.

Palmolive lathers perfectly in hard or soft water.

"THE CHILD"

By REGINALD H. WIGGINS, M.D., C.M., L.M.C.C.

CRIMINAL AND IGNORANT

In a previous article we pointed out briefly the marked discrepancy of reported physical defects in the school children of Victoria as compared with other centres in the province and the United States.

We will summarize the other conditions reported in the seventeen schools of Victoria, and compare with one school in another centre of British Columbia.

Remember that, comparatively, there should be about seventeen times as many reported for the seven schools of Victoria as for one school in another centre.

We should be able to infer from these reports that all the happy possessors of near perfect health; that they have an almost infinitesimal number of physical defects; that they are not inferior, mentally and physically, to children elsewhere, but rather are very superior to the poor souls in other parts of the province.

This is not so. I know that school children here are really inferior to others, mainly because the defects, which are present among the school children in any part of the country are not being detected here, consequently not reported to the parents, and nothing done about them to correct the faulty conditions which are present to allow of a fairer and fuller development for the child.

Not to detect these conditions which are present and correct them at a time of life when the results will be most beneficial, should be a criminal act. Will the voting public who are paying for these examinations continue to aid in denying their own children their birthright—a fairer, a happier and a fuller life. This they can't have if they have a defective body.

"We acted a play at the club last night."
"You were the hero?"
"No, the prompter."

Certain Rules Needed in Making a Good Sandwich

By JESSIE MARIE DE BETH

When a hint of summer comes on is given by the first warm day, it is high time to start looking up the sandwich recipes you laid aside after the winter's tea and bridge or club or church parties, because you will be needing those sandwich recipes more and more from now on until autumn.

Have you noticed recently in the stores and shops the number of new and interesting "cutters" for making various original shapes and designs for sandwiches? No longer is the hostess who takes a real interest in how food is served confined to the standard squares and triangles and oblongs of the typical restaurant or drug store sandwich. You now may have hearts and leaves and crescents and disks and ovals and probably there will be more new shapes among the "cutters" by the time this article sees print. The specially shaped sandwich is the thing today.

While it may seem needless to many readers, I must once more urge that for social entertaining, at least, the sandwich bread should be sliced water thin. This caution is doubly important when using the richer or heavier breads, like nut or chocolate or plumcake. If it is a party for men, then, of course, let your knowledge of the crowd be your guide, and better consult husband or brother, because men buy themselves on a party have definite and quite substantial ideas as to what constitutes a "he-man" sandwich.

For social affairs, however, water-thin sandwich is almost obligatory.

In preparing the indefatigable whip the butter to a creamy froth so it may be brushed lightly over the surface of the bread. In deciding the varieties, be guided by the known preferences of your guests, but make sure of two things—have plenty of sandwiches and have the widest possible assortment.

GINGERBREAD AND CHEESE RIBBONS

Bake gingerbread in a loaf. When cold, slice the loaf of bread, using a very sharp knife. Spread slices with butter and a filling made from combining six ounces of cream cheese, 1 cup mayonnaise and 1 cup finely-chopped nuts. Place slices on top of each other. Press together and chill. When ready to serve, cut slices of bread across the end.

CHEERY ROLLS

Quarter cup cream cheese, 1 tablespoon cream, shake of cayenne, 1 teaspoon salt, 2 drops onion juice, celery hearts, butter. Mix cheese, cream, onion juice, salt, and cayenne together. Remove crusts from very fresh bread and cut in thin slices. Place slice on a damp towel to keep from breaking. Cut celery into same lengths as bread and roll. Spread butter on outside edges to hold bread in place. Chill well and serve.

GREEN PEPPER LOGS

One cup pecans, chopped; 1/2 cup boiled salad dressing, 4 tablespoons peppers, minced; 1 teaspoon salt. Mix to a paste. Remove all crusts from a fresh loaf of bread. Cut into thin slices with a very sharp knife. Spread with mixture and roll. If paste is quite moist, the rolls will hold, otherwise use a toothpick.

DATE-NUT BREAD SANDWICH
Cook peeled dates to a pulp with a little water. Cool and mix with equal proportions of white cream. Spread between layers of thinly-sliced, buttered nut bread.

ROLLED CHEESE SANDWICH
Cut slices of cracker wheat bread the length of the loaf. Spread with soft butter.

Rub yellow cheese through a sieve and to each cup of cheese add 1/2 cup chopped sweet pickle and 1/2 teaspoon dry mustard. Blend well and spread on bread. Roll, fasten with toothpicks and wrap in waxed paper for at least 12 hours. Slice thinly. Delicious toasted.

ANCHOVY CORNUCOPIAS

Mix anchovy paste with a little mayonnaise. Cut thin slices of bread in rounds and spread with soft butter. Roll bread in shape of a cornucopia, fastening the closed end with a toothpick. In the opening spread sofie of the anchovy mixture. These are attractive on a plate of assorted sandwiches.

OPEN FACES SHRIMP SANDWICHES

Cut rounds of bread and spread with creamed cream cheese. Cut shrimp in half and lay two halves on each round. Decorate with slender pieces of sweet pickle.

Adolescent Girls

Health Service of the Canadian Medical Association and the Life Insurance Companies in Canada.

Practically twice as many girls between their fifteenth and twentieth years die from tuberculosis as do boys of the same age. It is only among the young women of the country that we are not making satisfactory progress in stamping out tuberculosis.

This, in itself, is serious, but it is all the more so if we consider tuberculosis to be an indicator of general health conditions. It points to a prevalent unsatisfactory health status of the adolescent girls and young women of Canada.

There are certain fairly common faults in the living habits of this age group which appear to be responsible, at least in part, for their lack of good health. It must be remembered that the results of faulty habits of living are seldom prompt or spectacular. Rather do these bad habits lead to a gradual undermining of health, to physical inferiority and fatigue, and to inability to recuperate from fatigue or infections. Too many girls are poor eaters. There is too much attention given to weight, and by far too much dieting among them. At this age, overweight, up to a point, is desirable, beyond which it should be overcome by exercise and by the elimination of candy and pastry, but never by any dieting except under regular medical supervision.

A good practical method is to state that if these girls will use one pint of milk a day, and once a day, take servings of some green vegetable, a salad and some fresh fruit, after that, they may eat whatever they desire. Milk is essential to provide the mineral calcium, and the vegetables and fruits will insure an adequate supply of vitamins.

Quantities of sleep—from ten to eleven hours—taken regularly are required. A noon rest is desirable, but unfortunately is not often practical. Many schools make the serious health error of having a short noon recess with the idea of closing earlier in the afternoon. This leads to fatigue which shows itself in the twitching, nail-biting and stammering which the school teacher sees only too often.

Poor posture grows out of a lack of sleep and rest, insufficient exercise and improper foods. It may be, too, that the girl feels overgrown, or, as an adolescent, be too conscious of her maturing figure, and this causes her to slouch her shoulders.

Bad habits of early life are apt to be carried into later life. Good health habits are needed at all ages. Questions concerning health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

NUT BREAD

THREE cups of flour, three teaspoons of baking powder, an egg, one cup of milk, three cups of sugar, three-quarters of a cup of chopped nuts, sufficient milk to bind into a light dough, set in a warm place to rise. Bake for twenty-five minutes. When cold, cut in thin slices, buttered.

PLOTS WEATHER FOR FORECASTS

Dominion Scientist Is Now Preparing Data on Climatic Changes

OTTAWA, July 6.—A man of science sits in the Dominion Observatory here making investigations and compiling records that he hopes will some day bring long-range forecasts of weather conditions in Canada. He has been keeping records for years, but they are still too incomplete to permit more than vague conclusions.

The man, Dr. Ralph E. DeLury, assistant director of the observatory in charge of solar physics, believes vast storms that occur in regular phases across the sun's surface have a definite effect on earth, influencing to a degree at present undetermined, accurately, rainfall, average temperature, plant growth, and the lives of insects, animals and men. Sunspots are attended by large, bright, high-flying clouds in the sun's atmosphere emitting such quantities of ultra-violet rays that when spots are most plentiful ultra-violet light reaching the earth may be double the amount received when they are scarce.

Dr. DeLury's observations have led to guarded conclusions that the effect of sunspots which occur in cycles of about 11 years varies with the nature of the country, while the record is obscured to some extent by occurrence of local phenomena that render precise investigation difficult.

In a paper on Dr. DeLury's work the Department of the Interior says some effects of sunspots on the earth are indicated clearly. Observations show temperatures throughout the country are higher when there are few sunspots and lower when many appear. The greatest range between the sunspot minimum and maximum is four degrees Fahrenheit; the least, one degree, and the average for the country, two degrees. The greatest variation has been observed at Calgary. Observations at the Toronto bureau of the Meteorological Service of Canada show about 20 per cent more thunderstorms occur at the sunspot minimum than at the maximum. The observatory draws the conclusion that the forest-fire hazard from lightning varies accordingly.

EFFECT ON RAINFALL

Inland, more rain falls at sunspot minima. The Prairie provinces' record shows about 50 per cent more rain falls at the minimum than at the maximum. The reverse happens at coastal points, observation at St. John's, Nfld., show.

Growth rings of trees, numbers of grasshoppers, grouse and rabbits are greater at or near sunspot minima than at the maxima. Near the minima prairie wheat records show an increase in bushels per acre of from seventeen to twenty-seven in wheat, oats, barley and rye. This observation covers the cycles between 1908 and 1929. In the same period and in the same way potatoes showed a yield variation of 25 per cent.

Dr. DeLury's observations show the last sunspot minimum occurred near the end of 1933, and that the next maximum should come about the middle of 1938. That year the average temperature of the country should be lower, fewer thunderstorms should occur, less rain should fall inland, but more on the coasts. There should be fewer grasshoppers, grouse and rabbits. Trees should grow more slowly and crops be less abundant.

Attractive Way of Serving Pineapple With Strawberries

Pineapple, fresh from the can, is not new to salad-makers. But pineapple, spines, skin and all, in an attractive and appetizing salad is new. And it's easy on the hands, too—no peeling of the tough and horny rind.

Summit-time fruit salad is delicious for luncheon or bridge-luncheon these days when fresh pineapple is on the Canadian market. I fresh medium-sized pineapple, 1 2 cups (1 lb.) crushed strawberries, 2 cups (1 lb.) crushed pineapple, 7 cups (3 lbs.) sugar, 1-2 cup bottled fruit pretin.

To prepare fruit, crush completely or grind about one-half of berries. Each berry must be reduced to a pulp. Cut rind of pineapple into medium-sized fully ripe pineapple. Measure sugar and prepared fruit to large kettle, mix well, bring to a full rolling boil over low heat. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard one minute. Remove from fire and stir in pretin. Then stir and skin by turns for just five minutes to cool slightly, to prevent floating fruit. Boil quickly and paraffin at once. Makes ten six-ounce jars.

YOUTH INCREASE IN CHURCH LIFE

LONDON, July 6.—There is a steady return to the church, as a centre of social life, by the young people of the Free churches, according to leaders of thought in the Methodist, Congregational and Baptist churches.

The secretary of the Free Church Council states the movement is marked. Sunday schools, after a continual decrease for years, are beginning to increase, in spite of the lowering of the number of the child population. Moreover, there is a greater sale for religious books, a practical kind than at any time since the war.

The Methodists, it is learned, are planning a campaign to be launched in Yorkshire for the formation of a "Youth and Christian Citizenship" movement, enrolling young men and women in the church for civic service on Christian lines. They have spent $2,500,000 a year for the past three years on the adaptation of their buildings to new conditions and the erection of new churches in housing districts.

INCREASED HOUSING

Discussing church accommodation in new districts, a situation without parallel in the history of the Church of England has arisen, according to Rt. Rev. Dr. A. D. David, Bishop of Liverpool. It is estimated that in the next seven years 1,000,000 new houses will be built in England and 7,000,000 people will migrate to new houses. During the last fifteen years the number of new houses built in or near Liverpool is about 40,000, and the increase will continue at about the same rate for some time.

Dr. David points out that in half the dioceses more than a normal shifting of the population is taking place. He urges that those little affected by the new housing revolution "should come to the rescue of those which are in danger of being overwhelmed by the stream of mass migration." The central authorities of the church should redistribute the burden.

Raft Has Role of Smart Detective in New Film

Not since his triumph in "Scarface" has George Raft had a role so admirably suited to his talents as the new Dashiell Hammett thriller in Paramount's "The Glass Key," which opened at the Dominion Theatre on Friday.

This newest film from the pen of the man who wrote "The Thin Man" presents George Raft as a close-mouthed, hard-fisted citizen, a sort of prime minister to a great city's big-shot politician, Edward Arnold.

It all revolves about Arnold's political fortunes. The wrong man of the city's administration, he suddenly clamps down on night life and acquires a group of new enemies.

When the son of the man whom he is supporting for senator is killed after an argument with Arnold, his enemies try to pin the crime on him. To complicate matters further, Arnold is in love with Claire Dodd, the boy's sister and a woman too smart for him.

Because he realizes that there is no other way to uncover the truth, Raft pretends to break with Arnold and to sell out to his enemies. He is caught spying on them and has to pit his brains and courage against a bunch of "toughs" to escape with his life.

The true killer is disclosed in a thrilling climax. Arnold is absolved of all blame and Raft wins the love of Arnold's daughter.

ENGLISH ACTOR IN COMEDY ROLE

Charles Laughton Plays Title Role in "Ruggles of Red Gap" at Playhouse Theatre.

Charles Laughton, eminent English actor who plays his first full-length comedy part in the title role of Paramount's "Ruggles of Red Gap," coming tomorrow to the Playhouse Theatre, now believes with the rest of his professional brethren that comedy roles are far more difficult to play than those of dramatic calibre.

Even "The Private Life of Henry VIII," which won Laughton the coveted Academy Award, could hardly be described as a hilarious picture, and his brief tash in "If I Had a Million," although extraordinarily funny, was too brief to be counted as comedy characterization.

With several scenes in "Ruggles of Red Gap," that are almost pure slapstick, Laughton feels that his new picture will cause a complete reevaluation of his acting ability in the eyes of the picture-going public.

A cast of stellar Hollywood comedians have been assembled to assist Laughton in "Ruggles of Red Gap." They include Mary Boland, Charlie Ruggles, Zasu Pitts, Roland Young and Leila Hyams.

Set in the dusty and booming 1890's, "Ruggles of Red Gap" is the comedy of a couple who win a perfect butler in a poker game in Paris. They bring him back to Red Gap, U.S.A., to dazzle their provincial society. To their amazement and his own, the gentleman's gentleman turns into a "regular guy."

COMEDIENNES IN COLUMBIA STORY

Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell, Hilarious Players, in "Kansas City Princess."

Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell, the pair of charming bombshells who caused "explosions" of laughter in "Havana Widows" and other pictures, again are teamed as a couple of chiseling, gold-digging manicurists in the Warner Bros. picture, "The Kansas City Princess," which comes to the Columbia Theatre tomorrow.

Supporting this comedy pair are such famous comedians as Hugh Herbert, Robert Armstrong, Osgood Perkins, Hobart Cavanaugh and Gordon Westcott, which places "The Kansas City Princess" high in the ranks of riotous fun makers.

The story is by Sy Bartlett and Manuel Seff, and has more mad mix-ups and merry love triangles crowded into the plot than are found in half a dozen books.

Robert Armstrong has the role of Dynamite, Hugh Herbert is the dumb but drill millionaire, with Hobart Cavanaugh and T. Roy Barnes as the two small town aldermen, Gordon Westcott is the love thief, who steals not only the hearts of the ladies, but their jewels as well, while Osgood Perkins plays the role of a double-crossing French detective.

Adorable Shirley Stars In Capitol Presentation

Shirley Temple, that arch darling of the screen, will capture your hearts again.

Her new picture, "Our Little Girl," opened yesterday at the Capitol Theatre to an eager audience. The transports of delight from young and old prove once more what a hold this wonder child has on the movie public.

It is an amazing performance she gives here. Without exaggeration, "Our Little Girl," an emotional story that might happen in any home, can be called her greatest picture to date. The rich spontaneous art she displays here rebuilds our faith in all that goes to make life a joyous adventure.

In this compelling picture, Shirley sings a song which bears the title

STORIES SPOTS FROM SEA TO SEA

TRAGEDY AT SEVEN OAKS

A HASTY, perhaps accidental shot, followed by a well-directed fusillade, which killed or wounded more than twenty men, such, in a word, was the "Battle of Seven Oaks," the most tragic incident on the Prairies since the coming of the white men. It is hard for us to realize the bitterness of the strife, thus climaxed, between Lord Selkirk's Red River colony and those opposed to settlement in the interests of the fur trade. Once already the hardships of years had appeared to end only in failure as the Scots were forced to abandon their Red River homes. But they returned with reinforcements, and under the vigorous leadership of the new governor, Robert Semple, even captured Fort Gibraltar, the Red River headquarters of the Northwest Company.

Now in the early Summer of 1816, their enemies resolved to dispose of the colony for good. Cuthbert Grant raised a force of half-breeds on the plains to the west, and moved to meet the eastern brigade of the Nor'Westers on the Red River, below Fort Douglas. Descending the Assiniboine the Bois Bruie, in Indian war paint, left the river above the forks with the evident intention of avoiding Fort Douglas. But Semple and some thirty men issued from the post and advanced along the Colony Road, now Main Street in Winnipeg, to intercept them.

At a point called Seven Oaks, north of the present city, the clash occurred. Semple was among the slain. Under threat of general massacre, Fort Douglas surrendered, and again the Selkirk colonists made a melancholy journey down the river towards the Hudson's Bay posts to the north. Soon the noble earl himself brought help and the colony was re-established, to find permanent peace with the amalgamation of the rival companies and to become the nucleus of a great province.

Says That World's Two Great English-Speaking Nations Must Get Together for Peace

"Until the two English-speaking nations of the world get together and tell the world we are going to have peace, we are not going to have it," said Mayor David Leeming in Seattle on Thursday. The mayor was a guest at the civic Fourth of July banquet held at the Washington Athletic Club.

Mayor Leeming declared he had been really inspired by the military and naval display in Seattle's parade, knowing that the thousands of men who passed in review stood behind the righteous form of government which both Canada and the United States represented.

Others present at the function included: Governor Clarence D. Martin, Admiral H. A. Hepburn, Admiral Edward F. Gregory, Samuel Whitaker, assistant United States Attorney-General, Capt. C. B. Mayo, Brig.-Gen. Maurice Thompson, Lieut.-Governor Victor Meyers and R. O. Reed, commander of the G.A.R.

DISTINCTION TO BE FOUND AT RAPHAEL'S

New View Street Store Features Sportswear and Gowns

A new store, setting a high standard in women's ready-to-wear and made-to-order gowns and apparel, has sprung into being with Raphael's, now open at 610 View Street.

The premises have been completely renovated and redecorated throughout, changing beyond recognition the store originally occupied by Steele's, tobacconist. The front is of artistic and up-to-date design, while the interior is modernistic to the last degree.

NOTABLE FEATURE

One of the most notable features is that of daylight illumination, allowing the patron to make a selection under conditions most favorable to matching shades. The color scheme is one of grey with a silver and walnut trim, while underfoot is a cherry-colored carpet, with lounges and chairs to match.

The policy of the management, under the direction of N. T. Cumming, is one of distinction and individuality, with the particular needs of the patron carefully considered. Living models will display the latest creations to customers, and there is assurance that every design is direct from the leading style centres.

SPORTSWEAR STRESSED

In the ready-to-wear line, sportswear is especially stressed, the varied stock including fine examples of English and imported woollens, together with the celebrated Linton Tweeds. Dresses and gowns made to order form a large part of the business, and in this department a fully qualified staff of dressmakers give a pledge of distinction in the chosen style, together with the finest quality in workmanship and material.

Motors Visiting Vancouver Island Are an Increase

An increase of approximately 165 per cent in the number of incoming and outgoing automobiles handled by customs officials at Victoria and Sidney during the first six months of 1935 over the corresponding period last year, is shown in a report made public yesterday by George T. Warren, Victoria publicity commissioner.

For the six months of this year, 4,400 cars were handled, while in 1934, 3,784 were counted. This represents an increase of 618 machines this year. The biggest increase was registered in Victoria, as 395 more cars were handled than in the corresponding term of 1934. Victoria has a total registration this year to date of 3,395 autos.

FARM PROSPERITY SEEN

COLUMBUS, O.—Bumper crops and correspondingly high incomes are in line for Ohio farmers this year, according to Earl H. Hamfield, director of agriculture. Prices will be higher and farmers are more hopeful than they have been in many years past, the director said.

CAFE TO GO

VIENNA—Austrians, and tourists, faithful to the memory of the former empire, have learned with regret that Cafe Fuchser is to close its doors. Fuchser was not only a coffee-house, but was one of the most famous of Vienna's institutions. The cafe for many years served the old nobility.

Little Stories for Bedtime

Bully the Fighter

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

How long that disgraceful squabble in the Old Orchard would have lasted, had it not been for something which happened, no one knows. Right in the midst of it someone discovered Black Pussy, the cat who lives in Farmer Brown's house, stealing up through the Old Orchard, her tail twitching and her yellow eyes glaring savagely. She had heard that dreadful racket and had suspected that in the midst of such excitement she might have a chance to catch one of the feathered folks. You can always trust Black Pussy to be on hand at a time like that.

No sooner was she discovered than everything else was forgotten. With Bully in the lead and Jenny and Mr. Wren close behind him, all the birds turned their attention to Black Pussy. She was the enemy of all, and they straightway forgot their own quarrel. Only Mrs. Rabbit remained where she was, in the little round doorway of her house. She intended to take on chances, but she added her voice to the general racket. How those birds did shriek and scream! They darted down almost into the face of Black Pussy, and none went nearer than Bully the English Sparrow and Jenny Wren.

Now, Black Pussy hates to be the centre of so much attention. She knew that now she had been discovered there wasn't a chance in the world for her to catch one of those Old Orchard folks. So with tail still twitching angrily she turned and with such dignity as she could left the Old Orchard. Clear to the edge of it the birds followed, shrieking, screaming, calling her bad names, and threatening to do all sort of dreadful things to her, quite as if they really could have.

When she finally disappeared toward Farmer Brown's barn those angry voices changed. It was such a funny change that Peter Rabbit laughed right out. Instead of anger there was triumph in every note as everybody returned to attend to his own affairs. Jenny and Mr. Wren seemed to have forgotten all about Bully and his wife in their old house. They flew to another part of the Old Orchard, there to talk it all over and rest and get their breath. Peter Rabbit waited to see if they would not come near enough to him for a little more gossip. But they didn't, and finally Peter started for his home in the dear Old Briar Patch. All the way there he chuckled as he thought of the spunky way in which Bully and Mrs. Bully had stood up for their rights.

Jane Dixon Says:

IF YOU CAN'T MAKE A HIT BY BEING NATURAL, IT'S A NO-HIT GAME—A REGULAR GIRL EXPECTS NOTHING EXCEPT HONESTY AND PROPER RESTRAINT IN COURTSHIP

So many question marks on this desk that we'll have to begin our weekly round-up today and make it a two-day session.

J.D.H.: If you start chatting what you are going to do and what you are going to say you'll make a muddle of it all.

Just be yourself.

Think about the girl and forget you.

Ask her what she wants to do, and if it is right and do-able, do it. Be kind and courteous and cheery.

Personally I abhor people who try to ingratiate themselves. Invariably they behave like stuffed shirts.

A regular girl expects nothing except honesty and a proper restraint in courtship.

If you can't make a hit by being natural, it's a no-hit game.

NOT THAT SHE LACKS COURAGE, BUT—

Uncertain: You certainly have crossed wires somewhere in your mental make-up. If a man who has enough courage to write love verses to a man should have enough courage to write love verses to a man, I am sure he would not be interested in the sort of erotic young woman who moaned over me in solitude and jittered about me in public. Would you? Why don't you greet this man joyously, since you are happy to see him? Hanging heads are unbecomingly to wholesome young girls.

ETIQUETTE QUESTIONS ANSWERED

K.J.: This column does not, as a rule, advise in questions of etiquette, but I am answering you because I like your letter.

Present your new friends to the girl and ask them (on the side) to request a dance with her. See that she meets the girls, too, especially your particular friends.

Since she is a stranger, it is up to you to provide partners before you dance.

You need not ask a girl to whom you have just been introduced for a dance unless she is being escorted by one of your friends, but it is always courteous to do so.

Conversation that is pre-digested is never interesting. Talk about things going on around you—mutual friends, the music, anything you find will interest your partner.

If refreshments are not provided but are at hand you should offer them.

Pull dress is worn on formal occasions. When in doubt, it is safer to wear your "Tux."

Broken-Hearted: I'd ignore what the other two girls say and I'd try to be fair enough to remember at all times that the young man is privileged to make his own decision in the matter of invitations. Why should you "drop him"? Enjoy the friendship he gives you and the attention he pays you, but make no demands on him until he gives you the right to do so. Be good natured and enthusiastic and full of fun. Vinegar is all right in salad dressing, but few like to drink it straight.

HERE'S A REGULAR GIRL—

Grace: You're a regular girl, Grace. Too regular to worry about a boy as bad-tempered and as self-centred as the one you've told me about. He may be very nice as you assure me he is, but there's something a little off about him. Don't act cold or high-hat. Don't act as though you regret him. You know you are happy to see him. Behave as though nothing had happened. You've done your part. If he fails to do his, under pressure of kindness, he is not the nice boy you have in mind.

HOME GARDENS TO BE JUDGED

Victoria Horticultural Society
Will Hold Annual District Contest

The Victoria Horticultural Society is again conducting its Home Garden Competition along similar lines to that of previous years. This competition differs somewhat from garden survey just completed by the society, inasmuch as all gardens competing in the competition must be general purpose gardens.

In addition to one of beautification they must also be productive, as in the score-card issued by the society 200 points are allowed in the floral part, while 200 points are allowed in the vegetable section. Practically any size garden might enter, providing these gardens are within the two and-a-half-mile circle. The society's three challenges in addition to cash prizes in each of the three classes. All competitors securing 75 per cent of total points will receive awards of merit.

In addition to competing in the local competition, five of the winning gardens may be entered in the garden competition of the best garden on the Island, which will be sponsored by the Vancouver Island Horticultural Association. The judging of the gardens will take place about the third week in July. A score-card and copy of the rules can be obtained by telephoning the secretary, F. E. Boulton, 538 Obed Street, E 8490.

Your Health and Your Weight

DANGERS AND DISADVANTAGES OF OVERWEIGHT
By JAS. W. BARTON, M.D.

When a surgical operation upon an overweight individual becomes immediately necessary, there is no time to reduce weight; improve the circulation, lower the blood pressure or strengthen the heart muscle; the surgeon and the anesthetist just have to go ahead and hope for the best.

Now while most overweight people come through their operations successfully, there are more "risks" before, during and after operation in the overweight than in one who is lean or one who is of normal weight. The reason for this is that fat tissue is not an active tissue; it is just storage food which is not likely ever to be needed, and interferes with the circulation of the blood. It is like trying to get about your kitchen and dining-room in which too much useless or unnecessary furniture or other objects are always interfering with your progress.

You can understand, then, that with this excess fat crowding other tissues and sometimes actually getting in between the regular cells or organs of the body, the circulation will not be able to do its work so well. Thus when an operation is performed the patient and the surgeon are faced with this operation at a time when the heart and other organs need to be at their best.

Hospitals and insurance companies definitely state that the overweight is a poor risk for surgery, and if the operation can be delayed for a time they try to get some of the excess fat from the patient during this delay.

Dr. E. Seifert, Munich, investigated the histories of abdominal operations. By diagrams he shows that the number of deaths from surgical operations in the obese (overweight) is greater than in lean persons in operations for appendicitis, inflammation of the gall bladder and ulcer and cancer of the stomach.

Having established the fact that the overweight person results actually from conditions due to his overweight; the failure of the heart and the blood vessels to do their work properly, being the most important cause.

What did he find?

His findings show that the lean person who dies following an operation on account of an abdominal disorder dies because of the disorder or some complication of the disorder following the operation.

On the other hand, the death of the overweight person results actually from conditions due to his overweight; the failure of the heart and the blood vessels to do their work properly, being the most important cause.

In fact, in the common everyday ailments—colds, flu, bronchitis, pneumonia—the overweight usually has a harder and longer illness than has the lean individual.

Not only that, but the figures and diagrams arranged from this investigation show that even if the overweight survives the operation, for disturbances following the he is still at a great disadvantage operation occur more frequently in the overweight than in the lean patient.

The complications which follow operations in overweight are the formation of pus in the wound itself, bronchitis, plugging of a blood vessel, pneumonia and collapse.

It is interesting and important that overweight is made to realize the handicap under which they undergo a surgical operation, and, as mentioned above, most of them naturally come through all right, but they do not do as well as lean individuals and the reason for this is not the disease—cancer, ulcer, appendicitis—but because their excess weight greatly interferes with all the body processes.

Now while most overweight people will not be undergoing surgical operations, nevertheless the very factors which make them poor surgical risks also interfere with their everyday health and their ability to do their best work mentally and physically.

Dr. E. P. Joslin, Boston, points out that overweight is so often the forerunner of diabetes. Further, high blood pressure from which may follow a stroke of apoplexy, is found more frequently in overweight because of the extra burden put on the heart and blood vessels by this excess weight.

In fact, in the common everyday ailments—colds, flu, bronchitis, pneumonia—the overweight usually has a harder and longer illness than has the lean individual.

HELEN MOODY IN GREAT VICTORY AT WIMBLEDON

Alderman Bob Dewar Captures Peace Cup At Beacon Hill Club

Popular Member of City Council Dethrones A. Marconini to Win Lawn Bowling Championship of Island—Mrs. Mowat Women's Champ

Alderman R. A. C. "Bob" Dewar captured the Peace Cup, symbolic of the Vancouver Island singles lawn bowling championship, last evening, at the Beacon Hill greens of the Victoria Club, by dethroning A. Marconini, another member of the Victoria Club, after a closely contested final, 15-11. It marked the third time in history that the popular city father has won the honor. Marconini had scored triumphs last season and in 1933; but Dewar's steadiness broke this streak after another successful tournament, which attracted a bumper entry list from all the local clubs and several from Nanaimo.

In the semi-finals, the newly-crowned champion eliminated S. Mitchell, of the C.P.R. Club, 15-7, while Marconini took the measure of J. Barton, of Nanaimo, 15-9. Barton played consistently throughout and made a great bid to take the trophy and title Up-Island. The tournament was played at the Victoria and C.P.R. greens, and following the final, Mayor Dewar, veteran Beacon Hill bowler, presented the silverware to the new titleholder.

In the Wenger Cup competition, which is emblematic of the women's singles championship of the Island, Mrs. Mowat, of Burnside, was the winner, after a fine and steady display of the pastime. Mrs. Watson, of Nanaimo, was second, and Mrs. Pauls, from the same city, was third. Mrs. Huxtable, Victoria, took fourth position. In the consolation rinks, a squad skippered by Mrs. Christie, of Nanaimo, and made up of Mrs. A. D. (C.P.R.), Mrs. Cook (Burnside) and Mrs. Davies (Victoria West), walked off with the honors. Stan Hawkins, well-known secretary of the Burnside Club, presented the women's awards.

Husband, Coach And Father Are Proud of Helen

SAN FRANCISCO, July 6 (AP).—The husband, "Ticked to death," the father, "She came from behind to win, did she? That's the way champions play!"

Those were reactions of Frederick Moody, Dr. C. A. Willer and Howard Kinsey to the victory of Helen Willa Moody over Helen Jacobs in the final of the all-England women's tennis tournament at Wimbledon today.

And with the trio, most of the Bay area sports world acclaimed Mrs. Moody's return to form, at the same time saying kind words for Miss Jacobs, the Berkeley girl who was stopped for the fourth time in the Wimbledon finals.

Queen of Courts Again

HELEN WILLA MOODY

Who regained the women's singles championship of the world yesterday on the famous courts at Wimbledon, by scoring a brilliant victory over Helen Jacobs, American titleholder, in the final, in three sets, Mrs. Moody who, as Helen Willa, dominated the courts of the world for years, climaxed her comeback campaign by scoring over Miss Jacobs, 6-3, 3-6, 7-5. Mrs. Moody was trailing 5-2 in the last set, but pulled herself together and ran off five successive games to take the match and title in as spectacular a rally as has ever been seen at Wimbledon. It marked her seventh triumph in England and her third over Miss Jacobs in the same final.

their disapproval of his tactics. The referee, "Pat" Griffin, issued many warnings to the rugged Italian, but they must have passed in one ear and out of the other, because he paid not the slightest attention to them.

Still the same talkative Parelli, the Italian said plenty, when, after he had punched Osborne in the midsection and then slammed him to the floor in the third round, Griffin awarded the fall to the Bellingham boy as a penalty to Parelli for the rough tactics he insisted on using.

PARELLI OPENS UP

However, Parelli opened up the works in the next round, and after using his fists and slamming Osborne again he fell on him for the tying fall after thirty-five seconds of grappling. Osborne was still prone on the canvas when the bell sounded for the next session; and Referee Griffin went to lift Parelli's hand in token of victory, but the Italian refused. After a few seconds, Osborne climbed to his feet and tried to continue, but again the rushing Parelli came in fast, picked him up and slammed him a couple of times and the bout was over. The winning fall came after twenty-five seconds of the fifth round.

Johnny Coyle, billed to meet Parelli, failed to put in an appearance, and Osborne, scheduled to wrestle "Two-Gun" Bob Miller, Chicago, was sent in against the Italian.

GIVES DEMONSTRATION

Miller gave a demonstration of the various wrestling holds and their application, and received a good hand from the fans. He later went two rounds in an exhibition match with "Burr" Griffin, and the bout brought the fans to their feet many times. Miller's demonstration and his bout with Griffin were two of the highlights of the programme.

Wrestling in the local preliminary, Louis Newman scored a straight-fall victory over Ed Dunc in a good bout.

HOTEL SQUAD DEFEATS IGO

Advances in Dominion Cup Playdowns by 4-3 Overtime Victory

VANCOUVER, July 6 (AP).—Columbia Hotel eleven tonight marched into the second round of the provincial playdowns for the Dominion Football Association championship when they edged out Igo 4-3 in a spirited overtime game.

Tucker opened the scoring for Igo after ten minutes of play and in quick order McLaren made it 2-0 for the others. Larson rushed through for Columbia's initial counter to end first-half scoring.

With only ten minutes of play remaining, Larson forced the game into extra time when he scored his second goal.

In the second half of the overtime game, Marino headed the ball past the Igo goalie after a neat combination effort. McLaren retaliated to notch the equalizer.

The break which gave the hotelmen the nod came when Spicer fouled Marino. McConaghy took the penalty shot and scored easily.

U.S. Will Have Brilliant Sprinters for Next Olympic Games

BY ALAN GOULD

Associated Press Sports Editor.

NEW YORK, July 6 (AP).—Dusky shadows are being cast athwart the coming Olympic Games by the greatest crop of negro track and field athletes ever developed in the United States, or for that matter anywhere else in the realm of competitive sport.

On the basis of a display of speed and agility brought to a stunning climax in the United States A.A.U. senior championships yesterday, it seems likely American negroes will dominate the sprints, as well as the running broad and high jumps in the 1936 International Games at Berlin.

GREAT ATHLETES

There have been great negro track athletes before, such as Sol Butler, Howard Drew, Binga Dismond and Dehart Hubbard, but nothing to compare with the current crop. Their development has been sensational since little Eddie Tolson, of Michigan, became the first negro to capture the double Olympic sprint crown in 1923 at Los Angeles, with Ducky Ralph Metcalfe trailing him in both events.

Tolson has turned professional, Metcalfe, despite a fine comeback to retain the United States 200-metre sprint title for the fourth consecutive year, has yielded the spotlight to Eulace Peacock and Jesse Owens, a pair of college sphenophores.

Owens yielded to Peacock's wind-blown 102 in the 100 metres dash, and was runner-up to the Temple star's mark of 26 feet 3 inches in the broad jump.

RALLIES TO DEFEAT HELEN JACOBS FOR ALL-ENGLAND CROWN

Comes From Behind in Last Set to Take Five Straight Games and Match in Brilliant Manner, 6-3, 3-6, 7-5—Crawford and Quist Defeat Allison and Van Ryn in Doubles

By GAYLE TALBOT

WIMBLEDON, England, July 6 (AP).—Helen Willa Moody, "poker-faced" darling of Wimbledon's galleries for more than a decade, reclaimed the world's feminine tennis championship with as fine and gallant a last-ditch rally as the game ever has seen.

Heading into what seemed certain defeat and frustration in the comeback campaign that has stirred the tennis world, the twenty-nine-year-old San Francisco matron dramatically overcame a 2-5 deficit in the third and deciding set of her match today with Helen Jacobs, United States titleholder for three years, downed her arch-rival, 6-3, 3-6, 7-5, and annexed the all-England singles crown for the seventh time.

Seventeen thousand spectators who sat or stood through the struggle verged upon hysteria before Miss Jacobs, run to the point of exhaustion, knocked the final ball over the back corner after an hour and forty minutes of grueling play.

The victory supplied all the vindication Mrs. Moody ever will need for the incident in the United States championship final of 1933 when, suffering from a back injury, she walked off the court in the third set with Miss Jacobs leading, 3-0. She was accused then of quitting, of depriving Miss Jacobs of a chance for a clean-cut, undisputed victory.

CONCLUSIVE REBUTT

Yesterday she gave a conclusive rebuttal to anyone who ever questioned her fighting heart. Almost as though she willed it, Mrs. Moody again gave her fighting adversary a three-game advantage in the third set, the same advantage Miss Jacobs had enjoyed at Forest Hills. She even spotted Miss Jacobs a 5-2 lead later in the set, and once, in the ninth game, had match point staring her in the face.

Then like an avenging goddess, she won five straight games from one of the game's fiercest who ever donned tennis shorts, and pulled the match out of the fire.

When the final point kicked the dust over the baseline, the winner ecstatically tossed her racket over her shoulder almost into the bleachers and literally raced to grasp her defeated rival's hand. Miss Jacobs stood up bravely as they walked side by side and the crowd stood and roared its approval for many minutes.

LOSER PROSTRATE

Then in her dressing room, Miss Jacobs lay prostrate for forty-five minutes and on the verge of tears, "Helen deserved to win," she said.

The second game developed into a cautious driving duel, both looking nervous. Mrs. Moody then broke through to take the game once more with a 4-2 count.

DEFENDING CHAMPIONS DOMINATE NET TOURNAMENT

Ross Hocking and Miss Philipsen in Singles Triumphs

Former Keeps Title by Downing Don Campbell in Four Sets and Latter Defeats Mrs. Birley to Retain Crown—Corfield and Campbell New Doubles Champs—Prizes Given

Defending champions retained their titles in four of the five open events yesterday afternoon at the Fort Street courts of the Victoria Lawn Tennis Club as another annual championship was brought to a close. Only in the men's doubles, where Reg Corfield and J. D. D. Campbell lifted the championship won last year by McCallum and Gordon, were new champions crowned.

Ross "Bud" Hocking, top-ranking men's singles player, annexed the championship for the second successive season by defeating J. D. D. Campbell, while Miss Mildred Philipsen disposed of Mrs. S. P. Birley in the women's singles final. Defending champions again came to the front when Mrs. R. B. Wilson and Reg Corfield defeated Miss Featherstone and Ross Hocking. Winners of the women's doubles title last season, Mrs. R. B. Wilson and Miss Jean Campbell duplicated this feat by defeating Miss B. J. Featherstone and Miss M. Philipsen, club singles champion.

TENDERS THANKS

H. B. Witter, genial president of the club, spoke briefly before introducing Mrs. C. E. Hodgins, veteran member of the club, who presented the prizes. The president thanked all who had worked for the success of the tournament, congratulated the champions and paid a special tribute to C. Hugo Haysman, tournament chairman, for his untiring efforts in helping to make the meet one of the most successful in the history of the popular and veteran club. Mrs. Hodgins was presented with a bouquet of flowers at the conclusion of the prize-giving.

RETAINS TITLE

Defeating J. D. D. Campbell, 1933 titleholder, in a four-set battle that was productive of some excellent tennis, Ross V. Hocking, defending champion, annexed the men's singles championship for the second straight season. The scores were 6-1, 3-6, 10-8, 6-3.

Using an unusually good assortment of shots and gaining a number of well-played points with his strong game at the net, Hocking uncorked some good tennis. Campbell, playing from the baseline most of the time, passed Hocking at the net with some remarkable shots which gained the well-merited applause of the gallery. The match lasted approximately two hours.

Hocking won the initial set in defensive fashion. He won the first four games, dropped the fifth to Campbell and then took the next two and the set with a score of 6-1.

The second set went to three games each and then Campbell, playing a strong game, took the three remaining games and the set, 6-3.

LONG SET

Eighteen games were played in the third set, with Hocking finally winning 10-8. Campbell was leading 5-3 at one stage, but Hocking rallied and won the three next games to make it 6-5 in his favor. Campbell squared the match at 6-6 and then each player won alternative games to make the score 7-7. Campbell forged to the front again when he took the fifteenth game, but Hocking came back to win three games in a row and the set, 10-8.

Campbell took a two-game lead in the fourth and deciding set at the start, only to have Hocking come back and square the match at 2-2.

Taking the fifth game, his last victory in the match, Campbell led 3-2, but Hocking, apparently stronger at the finish, won the remaining four games and the men's singles title.

Scoring a number of telling points with good placement, Miss Mildred Philipsen retained her women's singles crown when she defeated Mrs. S. P. Birley in straight sets. The scores were 6-4, 6-3. The defending champion was driving hard at all times, with her opponent making a number of excellent returns. Both players played from the baseline practically the whole distance, with net play conspicuous by its absence.

MAJOR UPSET

The major upset of the two weeks' play came yesterday afternoon in the men's doubles, where McCallum and Gordon, defending champions and four-time winners of the title, passed out of the tournament at the hands of H. G. Garrett and R. A. Phillips in a three-set battle.

McCallum and Gordon stroked their way to an easy 6-1 victory in the initial set, but dropped the second and third sets, 7-5, 7-5. In each instance the losers were trailing 2-5 and after pulling up to 5-5 dropped two games in each set and were eliminated from the championship bracket.

H. G. Garrett, veteran player and a former British Columbia men's doubles champion, combined well with Phillips, his younger partner, and played steady tennis after a shaky start in the initial set. McCallum and Gordon, strong Victoria doubles team that reached the semi-finals of the British Columbia cham-ionships last year at the Victoria Lawn Tennis Club courts, were unable to hit their stride against the consistent playing of Garrett and Phillips.

Playing steady tennis all of the way, Miss J. Campbell and Mrs. R. B. Wilson, defending women's doubles champions, stroked their way to a straight-set victory over Miss M. Philipsen, club singles champion, and Miss Featherstone, to retain their honors. The scores were 6-1, 8-6. The champions gained some useful points with their fine placements and were always the stronger team. Miss Philipsen, hard-driving champion, scored on a number of occasions with terrific well-placed drives.

Alabama Pitts at the Plate

Playing for Albany Senators for the first time in a regular league baseball game, "Alabama" Pitts, former athletic star of Sing Sing Prison, is shown at bat against Syracuse Chiefs in Albany. Pitts stole the show completely as he played marvelous ball defensively and proved himself equal to International League pitching at the bat. Though Albany lost both games of a double-header, Pitts, playing centrefield, got two hits in five times up and made the two stand-out plays of the game, catching hard hit line. Canadian immigration authorities have announced he will be permitted to enter Canada as a member of the Albany Club. Albany plays against Toronto on July 8 and in Montreal on July 11. He was allowed to play professional ball only after Judge K. M. Landis upset a ruling of minor league officials. This is a telephone picture rushed direct from Albany.

doubles final by Reg Corfield and J. D. D. Campbell in a four-set battle. Garrett and Phillips played their best tennis in the first set, which they won, 6-2. KELOWNA, B.C., July 6 (CP).—It was almost a one-man act as the curtain rang down on the Interior tennis championships today with Howard Langlie, bespectacled Seattle ace, cast high above all other contestants.

Winding up in the same brilliant form that has marked his progress through the meet, Langlie won three titles, men's singles, doubles and mixed doubles.

BARGAINS IN TRAIN FARESCheap Excursion Rates
Applying on Island Road
July 19 to 23

Best bargains in rail transportation ever offered to the citizens of Victoria and Vancouver Island communities were inaugurated last month by the Esquimalt & Nanaimo division of Canadian Pacific Railway, and so enthusiastic was the response to the announcement at that time that a repetition of the feature was decided on by the management. These bargains for July are scheduled for going either on Friday and Saturday, July 19 and 20, and good for returning up to and including Tuesday, July 23.

When the bargain fares were first introduced as an experiment, in June, so many persons took advantage of the big reduction in travel cost to visit friends and favorite resorts up-island that the accommodation on the train out of Victoria was taxed to the limit. This will be taken care of with additional equipment next week, while instead of being able to travel going on one day only, ticket purchasers will have the privilege of going either on Friday or Saturday, all tickets being good to return Tuesday at the latest.

These bargain fares work both ways, and in-between. Excursionists can take advantage of the offer and come to Victoria from the Alberni as well as Courtenay and other points, while they can go from one station to any other on the railway system, a minimum fare being applicable, however. The bargain fares represent a considerable saving in transportation cost, being really the same for the return trip on the days stated as that required for a one-way fare on regular days of operation.

VISIT MOUNT SICKER MINES

Party of Duncan Businessmen Inspect Tye Consolidated Properties

Representatives of the Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce of Duncan visited the properties of the Tye Mines at Mount Sicker, and were taken on a personal inspection by P. E. Peterson, M.E., managing director of the company, through the tunnels of the Lenora and into a stope where the ore is eighteen feet wide for a distance of 200 feet and were amazed at the ore in sight and at the possibilities for the future of the mine. Mr. Peterson conducted the party over the Lenora, Tye and Richard III claims, and when the party were leaving thanked them for the interest shown and the opportunity of taking them over the property. Many questions were asked, and all were answered to the satisfaction of the party.

Mr. Peterson further stated that as the managing director of the company he was going to devote his entire time to the mine, and assured his listeners that when this 100-ton mill built and in production within five months, with ore in sight for five years and further indicated ore for many years to come.

SUPPORT PROJECT
Robert Sanderson, president of the Board of Trade, on behalf of the visiting party, thanked Mr. Peterson for his clear and frank report on the mine, and said that the impression was prevalent that the citizens of Cowichan district were not appreciative of the efforts being put forth by the Tye Consolidated Mining Co. in its efforts to bring this property again into production, but it must be remembered, he said, that Duncan was not a mining community and they knew little of mining about mines and could not appreciate that a mine of such proportions could be lying at the very door for so many years, and that only by such efforts as were put forth today by people like Mr. Peterson and the Tye Consolidated Mining Co. could the possibilities be appreciated, but he was satisfied that from now on the company could be assured of all the support in their power, and believed the property worthy of the support of every citizen on the island.

The brigade band will play the units into camp and on arrival there will be Divine service, at which, it is expected, the district officer commanding will attend. Throughout the week the various sections of the brigade will carry out manoeuvres and gun practice, with July 14, the last day in camp, set aside for the annual sports.

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McINTYRE

NEW YORK, July 6.—Tallulah Bankhead continues to prize bloom in the theatrical publicity gardens. Past all possibility of cure, she is to Broadway at least the glamorous actress upon which feature writers and columnists hang a hundred and one stories. Some fact but many fiction.

Two years ago she went into a sort of Camille decline, a wasted woman whose career was believed over. Her admirers grouped about her hospital bed to console and were rewarded with mots that would do credit to Mr. Lonsdale, Miss Parker and other bright minds.

She became the mirror reflecting the sophistication of her time. And while head-waggers stressed the fact that she suddenly quit the sick-room with a new bounce. And became the life of the party again. She has little of the quality called diffidence.

And is impervious to criticism. Her repartee is sometimes tinged with ribaldry and always epigrammatic. She can walk with the stuffed shirts with a phrase that makes an impudent night hawk taxi driver wish he had kept his mouth shut. Nobody can talk back to Tallulah.

Veteran and hard-boiled copy readers agree the line that has brought them nearest to suspicion of tears since what is now known as The Big Tear Jerker was the statement of the Weyerhaeuser child timidly knocking off a cross cut on life strictly New York. Here gather for the Broadway breakfast of a cup of coffee and a cigarette, the sleek, pomaded lads who live by the art of chiseling. They are the perpetual schemers, like Louis John Bartolo in "The New York" for ever yearning a plan and, oddly enough, surviving the world holocaust without one change in their manner of living. They did not work before or through the depression or do they ever expect to. They discuss those of a with noses eternally to the grindstone, yet there's secret admiration for their philosophy: There is no such thing as a defeat, nothing is ever lost and each new day is a triumph.

Thinunabob: Sir Forbes Robertson was moon-eyed. Rebecca West thought Washington was "funny". Mrs. H. L. Mencken was on the last chapter of a book when she passed away. Carolyn Wells celebrates finishing of a novel with two cocktails in quick succession. . . . Yip-pee!

Clemence Dane writes to people the care nothing about on pink paper and to her friends on deep blue paper. . . . The Samoan Islands are to have a modern hotel called The Robert Louis Stevenson. With Clippie averages reading ten mystery novels a week. The Paris Ritz for the first time in three years has all floors open and a full staff. . . . Mrs. Roy Howard wears a ring with a large bloodstone on the first finger of her right hand.

Madison Square benches to a fellow suffer. "You know the only time my heart aches me" A negative shake. "When I go out and get drunk: that's the only time my heart aches me."

Many Automats in the late afternoon.

WHEN POLICE AND RELIEF STRIKERS CLASHED IN REGINA CITY

Regina's streets were turned into a battlefield last Monday night as the city police and Mounted officers mixed with the "On to Ottawa" relief strikers after arrest of their alleged leaders. Approximately 3,000 men, women and children were in Market Square when the trouble started in which Detective Charles Miller, of the Regina force, was killed. More than two score were injured. The above photograph shows the battle in Market Square with sections of the crowd fleeing before the spread of tear gas, smoke from which may be noticed in the background.

THE QUEEN VISITS AT WINDSOR

Her Majesty Queen Mary, with the Duke of Gloucester, photographed on their arrival at Windsor on one of the Jubilee drives from Buckingham Palace. They also visited Eton, where cheering throngs lined the streets through which they passed. On the Queen's arrival at Windsor the Prince of Wales approached the royal carriage and kissed his mother's hand in true cavalier fashion. The crowds cheered the Prince's act.

RECEIVE HONORARY DEGREES

INSIDE "STRAT" GONDOLA

The above picture shows Albert W. Stevens (left), commander, and Capt. Orvil A. Anderson, pilot, of the National Geographical Army Stratosphere Expedition, in the instrument-filled gondola in which they hope to be lifted thirteen miles or more into the sky. The gondola carries a large number of precision instruments and recording apparatus. It also carries a container for a sample of the stratosphere air.

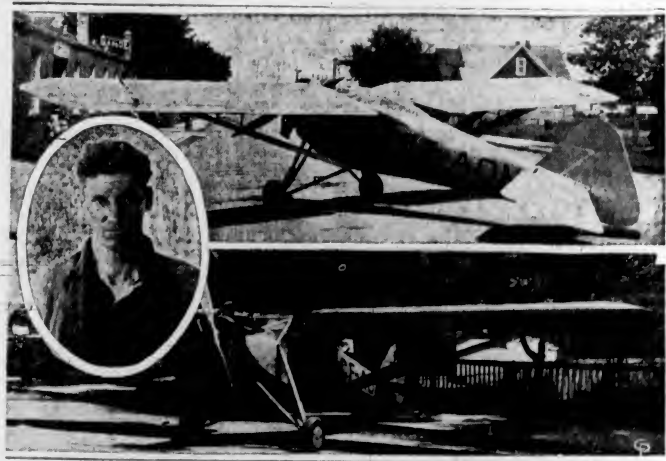

MISS GREAT BRITAIN

This trim figure, bright brunette and intelligent looking, is Miss Muriel Oxford, who entered a beauty contest as Miss Home Counties and stayed to win the title of Miss Great Britain. She will represent the Empire at the International show at Torquay, England.

UGLY DUCKLING OF THE ROYAL AIR FORCE

Angles instead of curves give a most peculiar appearance to this unusual type of seaplane which is being flown from the marine aircraft experimental establishment in Suffolk. The short "R 24 31," as it is called, is shown here being prepared for the Royal Air Force display at Hendon, Middlesex. The "boat" created quite a sensation in flight circles when it was given its first trials.

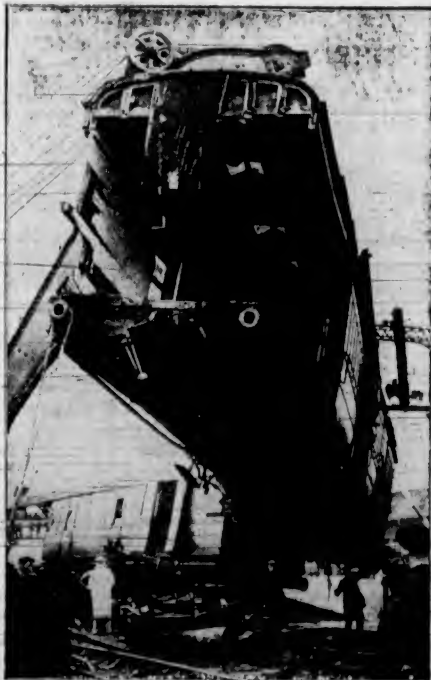

EDMONTON TO MONTREAL IN ONE HOP?

That's what Pilot Eber H. Van Valkenburg hopes to do. Above are shown two views of the "Bayamo M3" which it is hoped will make the Edmonton-to-Montreal non-stop flight. The inset picture of Pilot Van Valkenburg shows the designer in working outfit. The officials at Ottawa have given the craft their official blessing and the amateur job is all ready for the take-off. The ship has a cruising speed of 125 miles per hour and can be pushed to 175 miles. It carries 2,000 gallons of fuel, approximately a gallon for every mile of the trip.

SHE DISCARDS THE VEIL

Inquiring her way of a London "bobby" is Mme. Zorah Neidary, the first woman of Persia not only to discard the veil, but to travel unchaperoned on the high ways of the world. She is a remarkable woman, having served in the Persian Ministry of Public Works and represented her Government in the Ministry of Fine Arts in the United States. She hopes to see the emancipation of women in her native land. Mme. Neidary says she was a grown woman before she ever saw a man, except her father and brothers.

A BRITISH RAILWAY SMASH

This picture shows a wrecked express car being lifted from the tracks by workmen who cleared the wreckage strewn yards at Welwyn, twenty miles north of London, after a fast train ploughed into a section of the London-Newcastle express, killing fourteen persons and injuring twenty-nine others. This car was completely stripped of trucks.

PROFESSOR PICARD AND OTHERS

The gondola of the balloon in which Professor Picard and Max Cosyns made their ascent into the stratosphere at Dubendorf on August 18, 1932, when a height of ten and a half miles was reached, is presented to the Science Museum, Kensington, England. The photo shows Professor Picard (left) being greeted by Col. E. F. B. Mackintosh, director of the Science Museum, during the presentation of the gondola while Max Cosyns (centre) looks on.

UP FROM THE SURF

This photograph from sunny Santa Cruz, California, shows a crab net haul of three bathing beauties captured on the strand of the Bay of Monterey. The fourth in the group appears to be quite happy although she seems to be doing most of the work. Santa Cruz has become the mecca for thousands of tourists from Northern California and also for the sunbather addicts.

Meeting of 1910 Started Churches In United Action

Missionary Conference at Edinburgh Initiated Co-operation of Protestant Christendom in Missions—At Stockholm and Lausanne Other Movements Were Launched

By Rev. Dr. J. K. UNSWORTH

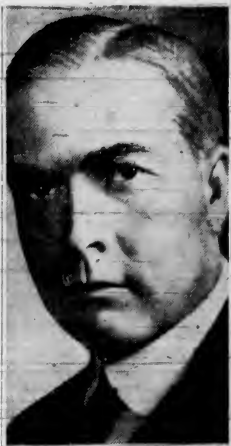

THE year 1910 is a pivotal point in the history of Protestant Christendom. It was the birth-hour of practical co-operation between the various communions. In 1910 was held in the City of Edinburgh, the International Missionary Conference, and it was there and then that the churches began to harness the evangelizing forces of Protestantism to the gospel chariot.

What Paris did for the nations of the world nine years later in launching the League of Nations, Edinburgh did for the churches. Appalled by the losses of the Great War, the nations ventured on the idea of co-operation. The churches, faced by the world's need and the insurges of materialism, came together as never before into a fraternity of unified action.

Not that there had not been world missionary conventions before 1910. From the first in Liverpool in 1860 to the latest in New York in 1900, missionary people of the world over had been meeting for talkfests. But they were talkfests and nothing more. The conferences were no doubt very inspirational. To pray, to sing, to talk together could not fail to create an electric atmosphere whose vibrations would carry far.

BEGAN TO DO THINGS

At Edinburgh the missionary folk started to do things. They took the crucial step of appointing a Continuation Committee that would put into effect the practical proposals that had been endorsed. There were thus put into the resolutions. The electricity was stored for use. The Continuation Committee was instructed to engage an executive staff, raise a budget and have its own secretariat. This was only twenty-five years ago. It is a matter of twentieth century church history that it was only twenty-five years ago that the Protestant churches really began to tackle the job of world evangelization co-operatively. Then, and not till then, team play began.

The churches it is true had been co-operating in other realms of work. In the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. Christian people had been helping the youth of the community, as here in this city, where the local association was organized as early as 1875. The Sunday school forces of the world, also, were co-operating more than half a century before the missionary forces began to work together. These two fields, however, important as they were, were sectional. The great world task of "preaching the gospel to every creature," which required united action more than any other enterprise of the church, had been up to 1910 conducted single-handed, each denomination moving forward by itself and under its own individual direction.

The Continuation Committee was but a start, a sapling. But the sapling has grown into a tree with widespread branches. An impulse was given to missionary co-operation which has extended in ever-widening circles. The staff of the International Missionary Council has grown from one secretary to three full secretaries and three assistant secretaries. The missionary societies of Great Britain and Ireland went into partnership in 1912. The North American societies soon followed their lead.

MANY COUNCILS FORMED
As a result of the visit to Asia in 1913 of Dr. John R. Mott to whose statesmanlike personality must be attributed more than to any other man, the co-operating movement—national missionary organizations were formed in India, China and Japan. Since then similar home have been set-up in all the principal mission areas, until at the present time, in the sending countries and the mission together, there are no less than thirty-six national or territorial organs of missionary co-operation, served by thirty whole time officers; all of this the outgrowth of the epochal Edinburgh conference.

Edinburgh did more, however, than unify the mission boards. If the churches came together to preach the gospel, the next step was to understand the particular kind of gospel that each individual denomination presented, and if possible come closer to giving a common message to the non-Christian world. Otherwise the non-Christian would be confused at the babel of voices, as indeed he was, and still is. The different communions came to him with a different Christianity. Which is the right one? He naturally asked.

WORK OF BISHOP BRENT

There was another statesman at Edinburgh who saw this, the great-souled Bishop Brent, who brought the charm of his personality to this city in a brief some years ago. He strove against many difficulties, until at last, in 1927, he had the satisfaction of seeing, although then in poor health, all the Christian churches, except the Roman Catholic, meeting together at Lausanne, in 1927. Here they sang and prayed, and talked together as to what they believed. This was the Conference of Faith and Order, which also appointed its Continuation Committee, and which purposes to convene again in 1937 in order to see how much farther still the churches can go towards proclaiming one common message to both the Christian and non-Christian world.

Another child of the Edinburgh Conference, though it was brought to birth before the Lausanne conference concerning faith and order, was the Universal Christian Council for Life and Work. The sponsor of this was another great Christian statesman, the late Archbishop Soderstrom, of Upsala, Sweden, whose faith and energy led to the summoning of a conference at Stockholm in 1925, to consider the practical activities of the churches and of their witness in relation to the social problems of the time. A second conference on these questions will be held, also, in 1937.

These three great modern movements, that of the world missionary, that of faith and order, and that of life and work, are mutually helpful and are more and more likely to co-ordinate in bringing the world, which science has made a neighborhood, into a brotherhood.

ENEMY IS SECLARISM

Meantime, the startling fact faces the churches that the great antagonist of Christianity in the world today is seclarity. As Dr. J. H. Oldham points out in the last issue of the International Review of Missions, this does not mean that the traditional non-Christian faiths have lost their hold—they are on the contrary exhibiting at some points a renewed vitality—but the dominant fact is the growing secularization of men's thoughts and activities.

The forces of modern society, technical invention and industrialism, seem to have fostered a seclarity that of faith and order, and this attitude toward life is invading the continents of Asia and Africa, corroding the ancient faiths and disintegrating social bonds.

The secular view of life, found both at home and abroad, in both Christian and non-Christian areas, is the real paganism which the churches, whether at home or abroad, are called upon to unite to overcome. To this end, as Dr. Oldham contends, there must be on the part of the churches "a fresh recognition of the centrality of the truth and reality that came to the world in Jesus Christ."

Animals From India En Route to Canada

Some of the animals from India that comprise the gift to Canadian children from the Government of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh are seen above. The animals are now somewhere on the Arabian Sea en route to Montreal, where they are expected around July 25. Latest word by cable states that all are alive though suffering from sea-sickness. The Indian lion seen in (1) will have the distinction of being the only one in Canada, perhaps in North America. He was born in captivity. In (2) is Mohammed Isahq, who was sent to care for the animals on their way across. Rikki Tikki, his pet mongoose, the natural enemy of all snakes in India, is seen with him.

What Today Means

"CANCER"

If July 7 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:45 a.m. to 12:45 p.m., from 2:45 to 4:45 p.m., and from 7:45 to 9:45 p.m. The danger periods are from 6:45 to 8:45 a.m., from 4:45 to 6:45 p.m., and from 9:45 to 11:45 p.m.

To be agreeable may be a difficult, but a well worthwhile task to set for yourself this day. Someone may make an unreasonable request of you. A blunt refusal might arouse anger, which a diplomatic excuse, tactfully made, is likely to prevent.

This is a good day for expressing sentiment. Mothers, wives, and sweethearts will be unusually responsive to demonstrations of affection, and should in turn give evidence of their love. An auspicious day for visiting and also entertaining in an informal way. Every factor of safety should be employed. If traveling, so as to avoid accidents by paying strict attention to what you are doing, as well as refraining from taking chances.

Married and engaged couples, as well as lovers, will have to guard against some selfish ulterior motive prompting any action on their part. If it is uncovered a satisfactory explanation might be hard to make. If a woman and July 7 is your birthday, your femininity is a charm you must never lose. "Let the dead bury their dead." Live each day, and have confidence that the future contains only a great deal of good for you. Most as many friends as possible, for they may prove to be a valuable asset. While money is not essential to your happiness, the probability is that you will have ample for all your needs. Your happiness is not to be gained through your marrying and having a family circle which will adore you. Marriage need not interfere with a business career. Music, painting, interior decorating, restaurant, or hotel management, as well as writing, are among the occupations which might have a great deal to offer you.

The child born on July 7, generally, when it reaches its teens, displays a rare amount of discrimination in the selection of companions as well as books.

If a man and July 7 is your natal day, you should be able to acquire knowledge without great effort and have a retentive memory, which will stand you in good stead. Theology, literature, medicine, law, education, art, and selling, are among the vocational lines in which you should excel.

MONDAY, JULY 8

"CANCER"

If July 8 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8:45 to 10:45 a.m., from 1:45 to 3:45 p.m., and from 6:45 to 8:45 p.m. The danger periods are from 10:45 a.m. to 12:45 p.m., from 3:45 to 5:45 p.m., and from 8:45 to 10:45 p.m.

Should an argument arise this day, it may be good judgment to try to avoid it through a compromise. Being too insistent will probably cause unpopularity, so avoid being so. Any form of corrupt practice may be readily detected, with disastrous results for those trying it. Business will have to be done on a fair basis, or it will terminate in disappointment. Justice will possibly be the dominating factor in the day's affairs. It might be difficult to make social engagements, so do not be offended if any invitation you may extend is declined for one excuse or another. Should you, however, be asked to attend some affair, it might pay to make an effort to accept, especially if it is a gathering of friends. Married and engaged couples, and those dreaming of love, should show their consideration for the other person's time by being punctual for any engagement.

If a woman and July 8 is your birthday, you are probably very liberal in your views. You will display both good judgment and tact not to flagrantly disregard in social matters some of the accepted conventional rules. You possess sufficient strength of character to be able to correct any shortcomings with very little effort. It will pay you not to ignore your faults simply because it requires a little exertion on your part to rectify them. It is best not to do things in a spectacular manner. Do your planning deliberately to get the best results. You should find brokering insurance, real estate, or conservative securities congenial work. You are likely also to shine as a saleslady. You probably will be very fortunate in marriage.

The child born on July 8 may, between kindergarten and high school age, have a love for showing off, especially in public. It will not be hard to make this child realize the necessity of curbing this inclination.

If a man and July 8 is your natal day, you must guard against wishing to always have your own way. If you expect to be popular, as well as successful, literary, or educational work, politics, and some specialized branch of salesmanship, are among the mediums through which your best opportunities are likely to come.

MOSTON, England.—Application of unionism to one of Britain's newest industries was signaled when 1,000 girls of a radio factory here walked out on strike for higher pay, as I use it more.

SHERWOOD CAMP IS NOTED FOR FISHING

Sherwood Camp, just north of the famous Qualicum Beach, combines both the attractions of seaside and fresh-water resorts. Situated at the mouth of the Little Qualicum River, the camp is especially suited to the needs of the fisherman, for from here it is possible to fish the river for trout or troll the bay for the big salmon.

The camp stands in an ideally picturesque spot, commanding the view across the water for which Qualicum is known all over the continent. It is but a short distance down the highway to the broad sands of Qualicum Beach, and the accommodation is excellent. The trout fishing is known to rank among the best accessible spots on the Island Highway.

Then there is the little matter of "Mehitabel Charlotte." The post-office wants to know why she would keep on sleeping herself "Dorothy." "Be your communication re the discrepancy in my (un)Christian names," her reply began, "I will endeavor to elucidate." After the obvious explanation of her misdeeds chiding, she concluded: "However I am now thirty-seven and not so sensitive, so in future will transact all my business in my baptismal name. I may like it better walked out on strike for higher pay, as I use it more."

MANY APPEALS STILL ON LIST

Court Has One More Prisoner Appearing in Person to Present His Case

In spite of the fact that the vacation for the courts is supposed to cover the months of July and August, the B.C. Court of Appeals finds itself running far into the vacation period in order to dispose of the appeals which are to be heard by that body.

There are two civil cases to be reviewed by the court at this sitting. These are the cases of Vancouver Waterfront, Ltd. (R) vs. Vancouver Harbor Commissioners (A); and Shadin et al. (R) vs. D. Spencer, Ltd. et al. (A). W. E. Burns, K.C., appears for the appellants in each of these cases. A. Alexander appears for the respondent in the first named and G. M. Grant for the respondent in the second appeal.

These civil cases have been set down at the end of the list for this sitting.

CRIMINAL APPEALS

The remainder of the appeals fall under the heading of criminal cases. One more convicted man, named Coullin, is desirous of appearing before the court in person. This will be arranged. Joe Celona's appeals are still in progress and will take probably two more days. The appeals on behalf of Clarence Bancroft will follow with Rex vs. Hodgson, a local appeal against two months' sentence for assault; Rex vs. Dechman from Vancouver Assizes; Rex vs. Hepburn et al., also from Vancouver; and Rex vs. Hallon, a local appeal, completing the list.

There is the possibility that some of these cases, where the appellants are on bail, may be allowed to stand over until the next sitting, which would shorten the list considerably.

RESEARCH BUREAU WORK IS PLANNED

Government Would Aid Industries By Discovering Low-Cost Manufacturing Methods

In co-operation with the University of British Columbia and the Dominion Government forest laboratories, the Provincial Government plans to help in the development of new industries utilizing wood products, Hon. A. Wells Gray, Minister of Lands, announced before his departure for the Mainland. The research bureau's task will be to discover low-cost methods for the manufacture of by-products which may be sold on world markets, it was explained. The Legislature, at its next session, will be asked to vote funds for this purpose, the minister said.

CULBERTSON on CONTRACT
By Ely Culbertson
World's Champion Player and Greatest Card Analyst

ONE TRICK UNDER GAME
The type of correct call as illustrated in the hand below is often laughed at by players who do not know the underlying theories of sound and accurate bidding. To stop at one trick under game is perhaps the most difficult which the average player has to contend. The lure of the larger score frequently places the contract in jeopardy, and although a game may be made, that result should not encourage over-bidding on subsequent hands.

SAFE, SOUND AND SENSIBLE
This hand both East and West used good judgment in refraining from going to game.

The bidding: Figures after bid paragraphs.

East South West North
1♥ Pass 2♥(1) Pass
3♥(2) Pass Pass(3) Pass

1. A pass could not be severely criticized. However, the hand does contain sufficient playing and honor strength to justify giving partner one chance in case his hand is just under a two-bid.

2. East has considerably more than a minimum opening bid. But he is not strong enough to arbitrarily jump to four in case his partner should have a shaded raise.

3. West naturally passes, having had just a minimum or shaded raise in the first place. His partner's three-heart bid is a "sign-off," leaving him the option of continuing if he holds sufficient additional values.

THE PLAY
In the play of the hand due to three favorable finesses, the declarer is able to make four-odd. However, the odds against this are at least seven to one, and a game bid is distinctly had even though it turns out that four-odd can be made.

COLLEGE CRICKETERS DROP MATCH

Ridley College Opens Western Tour Poorly Against Winnipeg Eleven

WINNIPEG, July 6 (P)—The Ridley College cricket eleven opened its tour of Western Canada here today, losing a close match to a combined
St. George and Eaton team. The wicket was soggy and wet, and the youthful Ridley cricketers found runs hard to get, being all out for 77, while the locals hit-up 83 for eight wickets.
R. G. Turnbull, St. George's star all-rounder, found the heavy wicket to his liking when play began, and Ridley lost three wickets for two runs. When the teams returned for lunch, the visitors had only twenty-five runs on the board for six men. On resuming play, Pat Purcell and J. Mitchell stopped the violin, knocking up 13 and 20 respectively, the latter being not out.
J. Phippen and R. Howland did the damage between them for the locals, Phippen scoring 39 with two hard chances early in his innings, and Howland hitting up 32 before being caught by C. M. MacLachlan.
Turnbull has the best bowling average of the day with 5 for 21, while W. Wilson collared 4 for 33. Ridley plays an all-star local team again Monday.

DEAN BLOW-UP IS FINISHED

Frisch and Bredon Decide
To Let Star Pitcher Go Unpunished

ST. LOUIS, July 6 (P)—Dizzy
Dean, alternately baseball's bad boy and hero, avowedly is to be unpunished for his refusal to appear yesterday in an exhibition game at St. Paul.
Despite his rebellion and untiding remarks about the world champion
St. Louis Cardinal club being "a chain gang," team officials agreed today that the incident was "finished."

After a lengthy conference with President Sam Breadon, Manager
Frankie Frisch this afternoon declared he planned to take no action against the truculent prima donna of the Red Bird pitching staff.
Plainly weary of the whole affair, neither Breadon nor Frisch would comment at length.
Unrepentant and unchastened
Dizzy, who charged during his oral explosion at St. Paul that the Cardinals "were a chain gang, an outfit that would send you back if you structed in Mexico City, Mexico.

STOP JUST IN TIME

TIPPIN, O.—If Allen E. Seale hadn't happened to have shut off the power a moment before, he would have suffered a horrible death from a circular saw. As it was, Seale fell against the saw but it came to a stop after cutting through his clothing.

Eulace Peacock Defeats Owens Twice in Week

Temple University Negro Flashes to 100-Metre Victory Over Ohio State Sensation

CRYSTAL BEACH, Ont., July 6
(P)—Eulace Peacock, Temple U.
Negro star who startled the track world with a double victory over Jesse Owens, Thursday, demonstrated today it was no fluke when he flashed home in front of the Ohio State negro in the 100-metre dash feature of the Buffalo, N.Y., Police Club games, in a driving finish.

Peacock allowed Owens to set the pace for most of the distance and then flashed to the front in the final twenty-five yards, crossing the finish line going away with a burst of speed. The Temple soph-omore's time was 10.5 seconds, three-tenths of a second slower than the time he set Thursday at Lincoln, Neb., in defeating Owens.

Esac Meadows, of Michigan
State, was a bad third in the race.
Peacock's Lincoln triumphs over Owens were in the broad jump and the 100-metre dash.

WHO WAS THE MAN IN THE IRON MASK

Who was the man in the iron mask? We must confess ourselves baffled. Historians have given us various theories relative to ancestry ... Eye witnesses have given us accounts of his stature, habits, mode of apparel, deportment and one hundred and one other details, but—one feature is really significant ... NO ONE KNOWS WHO HE WAS.

If the analogy doesn't seem too far-fetched, may we liken him to the manufacturer who, making a good product, decides it to be so superlative that it will eventually sell itself! He, like our friend in the mask, is doomed to bitter oblivion—characteristic of men who, through short-sightedness, fail to grasp the one essential fact that business opponents are merciless. They ask no quarter and give none. When you are faced with competition of this kind, take the initiative, market your product FIRST and do it over-night ... in the DAILY NEWSPAPER.

FLIGHT ... by W. D. TIPTON and J. H. MASONTHE FIRST PACIFIC FLIGHT

LIEUTS. LESTER J. MAITLAND AND ALBERT HEGENBERGER MADE THE FIRST PACIFIC CROSSING, LANDING IN HAWAII, ON JUNE 29, 1927. THEY FLEW 24,000 MILES IN 23 HOURS AND 50 MINUTES.

THEIR SHIP WAS A TRIMOTORED MONO PLANE, HEGENBERGER, THE NAVIGATOR, HIT HAWAII, A TINY DOT ON THE PACIFIC, RIGHT ON THE NOSE.

THE RADIO BEAM WAS USED ON AN OCEAN FLIGHT FOR THE FIRST TIME AND FUNCTIONED PERFECTLY.

TO the Army Air Corps went the palm for being the first to span a part of the Pacific, non-stop, when Lieutenants Lester J. Maitland, pilot, and Albert P. Hegenberger, navigator, flew a tri-motored transport from Oakland, California, to Honolulu, on June 29, eight years ago.

For the first time in ocean flying the radio beacon was used. This radio station was set up in Honolulu, and by the use of a special receiving set on their plane, Maitland and Hegenberger were able to hit Hawaii, a tiny dot on the Pacific, right "on the nose." An error of as much as two degrees in the 2,400-mile flight would have caused them to miss their destination completely, and they would have been faced with another 2,400 miles of open water.

In addition to the radio beam, Hegenberger, at that time the ablest navigator in the Army Air Corps, was able to contribute his skill in celestial navigation, and the combination proved 100 per cent successful.

WHY DO WE CALL IT CHINA?

China was originally chinaware, signifying literally ware from China. This was pottery and earthenware of a fine, almost transparent texture, manufactured, of course, in China, and introduced into Europe in the sixteenth century, through Portugal. For two centuries thereafter practically all the chinaware so-called came from the Orient, from China particularly. Early in the eighteenth century, however, Europe began setting up its own manufacturing. Some of these became quite famous. The first factory, for instance, was built in Dresden, which became known throughout the Continent for its excellent product. The Persian name for earthenware of this type is chin, which was the name by which it was described throughout India and the East generally.

The close trade relationship between England and India, coupled with the natural tendency to cut down a longer term for a commodity used, resulted in shortening chinaware to china. This became the generic name—regardless of origin—of the utensils with which we are familiar.

NANAIMO ATTRACTS MANY VISITORS TO VANCOUVER ISLAND

Nanaimo Well Equipped to Serve Vacationists
With Every Sport in View—Lovely Scenery
Astonishes Those Who Know Nanaimo
Only as a Coal City

NANAIMO, the second largest city on Vancouver Island, has long held the reputation of being a thriving coal city and as such the natural scenic advantages of the city and district have been overlooked. Today it is taking its rightful place in the catalogue of vacation spots on Vancouver Island, with recreational facilities abetting the sheer beauty of the lovely setting.

HISTORICAL INTEREST
It is second only to Victoria in age and consequently holds many points of historical interest. Outstanding among these is the Old Bastion, where once grim cannon peeped forth across the harbor, protecting the residents from the menace of hostile Indians. It speaks volumes for the administration of early days, when it is recorded that the guns were used for nothing more lethal than saluting purposes, though their presence undoubtedly was a salutary factor in keeping the peace. The Bastion is now used as a museum, where relics from pioneer days are displayed.

EASY ACCESS
Nanaimo is admirably situated from a viewpoint of easy access. By the Island Highway it is, but seventy-seven miles to Victoria, along a well-surfaced road which carries the visitor through lovely country. A scheduled bus service maintains bi-daily schedule, and, in addition, the E. & N. Railway connects the city with points north and south. By boat it is only thirty-six miles to Vancouver and passengers and cars are landed by fast and modern boats.

The number of beauty spots in the vicinity of Nanaimo draw many tourists every year. The Nanaimo River Canyon is famous throughout the country. The Nanaimo Lakes are situated in almost untouched country, yet are easily reached by a short drive from the city over good roads. Fishing, hunting and boating are available throughout the district. Within the last few years the imperative need for a new and up-to-date modern hotel, in order to cope with the growing tourist trade, has been met by the erection of the Malaspina Hotel, which boasts a commanding view of the harbor. No thought or effort has been spared to bring this to a point of perfect comfort, convenience or beauty.

FINE CUISINE
The Plaza Cafe is noted for delicious cuisine and prompt service. The slogan—"We never close"—is fully lived up to, for any time of the day or night a full meal or a dainty snack may be secured. The Plaza is conveniently situated close to the wharf and main business section.

DAYVANT CAFE
The Dayvant Cafe, situated on the main street as the visitor enters Nanaimo from the south, has recently been taken over by G. E. Lovell, formerly in business in Duncan. The entire premises have undergone complete renovation and redecoration and all meals are served, and, in addition to up-to-date fountain and counter service, special facilities for tourist information and service are maintained.

GOOD AUTO CAMP
A first-rate auto camp lies just outside the city limits and all conveniences are to be found. Close by is a well-laid-out golf course of nine holes. Within a few miles are splendid bays and beaches, suitable for bathing, boating and fishing.

LADYSMITH IN FINE LOCATION

Beautiful Setting Marks Island Town Between Duncan and Nanaimo

Ladysmith was a smelting as well as a mining town, and at one time was so busy that there were no less than eighteen hotels, always full. Today it is a very peaceful center, depending mostly on the lumbering business, oyster-raising beds and agriculture.

The town is beautifully located and has a very mild climate. It has a Summer resort at Shell Beach, across the harbor, where many visitors and residents of Ladysmith spend many hours during the Summer months.

HEALTHY PLACE
Ladysmith, on account of its beautiful location and outlook, could take care of a very large tourist trade. It is a very healthy place to live. A favorite calling-place when in Ladysmith is the "Wigwam," opposite the Cenotaph. One can breakfast in Victoria and lunch in Ladysmith at the "Wigwam" Tea Rooms.

Ladysmith is also noted for the fine-flavored cherries grown in and outside the town. They are much in demand during the season.

MOUNTAIN CLIMBING
For those who like mountain climbing and hiking, there are a number of interesting climbs. Just at the back of the town one can go along a trail that will lead to Cowichan Lake. There is good hunting in season and plenty of good fishing streams close by. Ladysmith is a good place to make headquarters for all outdoor sports.

Opposing the introduction of talkies, employees of all theatres in Osaka, Japan, recently went on strike.

Fishing Bulletin

BELOW is given a summary of fishing conditions on Vancouver Island for the past week:

General Survey—Fishing of all kinds was good at the beginning of the week, but fresh-water sport was affected by changing weather during the last few days.

Salmon—A larger number of Springs have been caught in Brentwood. These fish are not of great size, averaging about ten to twelve pounds, but are in excellent condition and give good sport. Bluebacks are still being taken in some parts of Saanichton Arm, particularly at Deep Cove. Good reports have also been received from Qualicum, where Bluebacks, four to five pounds, have been taken freely, and also there has been a fair run of Springs averaging about ten pounds.

Trout—Fly fishing has not been so good, owing to cool weather, but trolling has been fair in the larger lakes, particularly Cowichan (western end of the big lake), Sproat Lake, Comox Lake and Cameron. Fly fishing only fair on the Cowichan, and perhaps a little better on Campbell River. This sport will come in again immediately the weather becomes warmer.

Black Bass—Owing to the cool weather, this sport has not come in well, practically the only fish being taken have been caught on the troll.

Sea Bass—Good sport on calm nights and early mornings off the Victoria Harbor and from Victoria Breakwater.

Steelhead—Fish up to eight and ten pounds have been taken on the fly in the Stimp during the past week. This is the best sport for real fishermen at this time.

YELLOW POINT POPULAR SPOT

Tillicum Camp Serves Resort of Unusual Beauty—Privacy Assured

Sixty-six miles from Victoria, just a short distance past Ladysmith, lies Yellow Point, a delightful resort, served by the Tillicum Camp. Yellow Point is reached by an excellent gravel road turning off the old Highway.

The drive itself is of supreme attraction, leading as it does through heavy belts of untouched timber which forms a natural park. Emerging on the quiet, sheltered beach, the view is unsurpassed. Across the blue water lie the snow-capped mountains, with the green islands of the middle distance forming a pleasing setting for the passing boats. Small, lazily-chugging fishing vessels, tugs, barges and great ocean-going freighters bound for the Orient, all pass the sloping beaches of Yellow Point.

TILLICUM CAMP
Tillicum Camp is situated in the heart of this lovely spot, offering to the visitor all the heart could desire in the way of natural beauty, glorious scenery and quiet rest.

Not the least of the many advantages is found in the seclusion from the main highway.

Comfortable cottages are available, and from here it is possible to make hikes to the numerous small lakes in the vicinity, bathe, fish, laze or organize boating parties.

PICTURESQUE PLACE ON ISLAND HIGHWAY

Chemainus, the most northerly point in the Cowichan district, is seven miles south of Ladysmith. Here is one of the largest sawmills in the world, belonging to the Victoria Lumber and Manufacturing Company. But, despite the busy industrial air that is lent by this establishment, Chemainus holds a strong claim for beauty, both in the approach and actually in the town, where spreading maples shade the streets.

The Chemainus River, crossed by the Island Highway a few miles south of the town, rises behind a mountain range that offers all that a sportsman could wish. Fresh-water fishing in the swift waters of Copper Canyon, deer, bear and cougar hunting along the ridges of Mount Prevost, Sicker and Brenton, all are within easy hiking distance.

Along the lower reaches, close by the river, are picturesque farms, the highway winding between sun-filled hay fields. A fine beach runs along the foot of the town, with excellent bathing and first-class fishing in the bay.

Why the moon should be partial to lovers one might easily explain on very prosaic grounds—perhaps not unlike the reasoning of the Irishman who called the sun a coward because he goes away as soon as it becomes dark, whereas the blessed moon stays with us most of the night!

Fishing for Proteins

By
ROBERT A. GURNEY

KINGS and Queens of Ancient Egypt, 4000 years in their royal tombs, soon may be blood typed to determine their relationship one to the other. Human blood groupings are due to two extreme chemical substances, found in the blood races and even the man-like apes. These substances are hard to destroy by such methods as heating and drying.

One might well ask what that has to do with fish oil, fish meal and their relation to cows, pigs and poultry. It hasn't a thing to do with it except as a record of the result of a highly specialized branch of scientific research. This record may be useful to the science of medicine of the future. In this article I prefer to keep within the near future and the results of a scientific research that is applicable to the immediate present and to endeavor to explain, in brief, the actual results of recent experiments in biochemistry in so far as they relate to fish reduction processes, particularly the new Butterfield process.

Fish Reduction

WE are dealing now with fish reduction processes. There are two valuable products to be obtained through the process of fish reduction—oil and meal—both important to our economic life. To the layman the extraction of oil and meal from fish may not seem a very difficult undertaking. But it is. It is a very difficult, as well as a highly scientific undertaking—so much so that it has taken years of study to bring to a commercial success the new process invented, protected at the Patent Office, and to now be commercially applied by W. S. Butterfield through Farm Foods Limited, a company recently incorporated under the laws of British Columbia. Mr. Butterfield is a Victoria man, and the industry about to be developed will be one exclusively Vancouver Island.

Present fish reduction methods have, for years, proved unsatisfactory. That is a statement of fact that is undisputed by experienced biochemists. Therefore, with the increasing demand for oils that will fill the requirements of the standard of the veterinary or medicinal oils (present operations produce an oil of relatively low vitamin potency), it was necessary to develop an entirely new process to produce vitamin-rich oils. In the fish meal by product, high oil content and low protein value frequently render the product indigestible as a food for stock. This difficulty has also been overcome by the Butterfield process.

To further add to the value of the new process, actual tests have proven that the process can be made a continuous one from the insertion of the raw material to the final extraction of the meal and oil. The raw product is treated entirely in vacuo, and the oil is extracted from the meal by means of a solvent. That is important because it forms the basis of the whole structure which places the products in the commercial field as a highly specialized, marketable commodity that will demand the very highest returns.

Extensive Market

IT is not necessary to set out the various uses to which fish oil may be applied. They cover a wide field and enter into many phases of our industrial activity. The market for a good oil product is not by any means limited, although it has been considerably curtailed in recent years, due to the disadvantages mentioned above.

The advantages claimed by the Butterfield process are, briefly, as follows:

- (1) Elimination of waste resulting from a system of extracting the oil by pressure.
- (2) A meal of low oil content and high protein value, and a veterinary and medicinal oil of high vitamin potency.
- (3) The recovery of the solvent from the oil and meal by film evaporation.
- (4) Exceptionally low operating costs.
- (5) The handling of all types of fish—including the shark—with equal facility, making it possible to operate continuously for twelve months of the year.

Were Not Standard

IT is not disputed that all of the above markets were open to fish oils and fish meal for a number of years and that fish reduction plants had been operated and the products sold. But the products were of a non-standard variety, and today we are living in an age that called for standardized articles.

In order to get a clearer understanding of the value of the proposed new industry, it might be as well to quote here an excerpt from progress report No. 22 of the Pacific Biological Station:

"Fish liver oils of high vitamin potency, such as are obtained from the halibut, ling cod, black cod, salmon and other fishes, are finding a wide application in the medicinal field and consequently there is much interest in methods which may be used for their production. Ordinary methods of straining and pressing, as used in cod-liver oil, or in the fishmeal oil industry, cannot be used, since the oil content of the livers of the halibut, ling cod, etc., is very low, and no free oil is obtained after such treatment."

To further support the claims of the vacuum process, which is the Butterfield process, Rodney Delisle, a biochemist of high standing in British Columbia, says:

"In the light of my many years of experience with edible fish meal and vitamin-bearing fish oils, I am persuaded that only by the use of low temperatures in vacuum can desirably high protein quality, a maximum percentage of protein, and protein digestibility, be attained."

"After having carefully studied the plans, specifications, etc., of your (Butterfield) system of edible fish meal and veterinary oil production—a system which may be described as an ingenious mechanical combination of the low-temperature vacuum principle and solvent oil extraction—I feel I would be lacking in proper appreciation of your (Mr. Butterfield's) inventive genius if I did not take this opportunity to congratulate you on the culmination of your efforts to develop a system of fish meal and oil production comparable in advancement with those of animal nutrition.

Valuable Product

I HAVE, therefore no hesitation in saying that edible fish meal and vitamin-potent veterinary oils, such as your system can produce, will be favorably received by livestock breeders.

It should be easily possible for you to obtain a premium for your products on account of higher protein content, improved quality and digestibility in the edible fish meal; also a certainty of higher vitamin concentration in your veterinary oils, the letter concludes.

The above extracts are removed from the context, but in no way do they differ, in tone, from the intent of the letter to Mr. Butterfield.

The Chief Chemist of the Fisheries Experimental Station of the Biological Board of Canada at Prince Rupert comments favorably on the process. In part, he says: "In regard to the desirability of the process, which will produce a meal of low oil content, it is my opinion such a process would have a distinct advantage over those now used on this coast."

The foregoing should give a fair idea of the purposes of the industry and the market possibility.

Most people have heard, or read, about protein and vitamin. Let us deal first with protein. It should always be remembered that within very recent time little or nothing was known about the "nature" of protein, and as more light is thrown on the problem it becomes evident that no two proteins are alike in their amino acid structure, and unless the ration supplies all of the same amino acids, in right proportion to the product formed (milk, for instance), the body will be called upon to make up the deficiency.

Animal Organism

PERHAPS it would be better to explain the necessity for supplementing dairy cattle, or other livestock, rations with high protein concentrates. (Continued on Page 6)

Coaching Days and Wayside Inns

By Dora Kitto

Roads have been made to accommodate travelers and are evidence that a country is increasing in population and commercial enterprise. It was with difficulty, however, that the pack horse and the rider could pick a way along the old English trails or the Roman roads, for even these had become neglected during years of dearth and of warfare. When the stage coach came into being, which was probably in the time of the second King Charles, it was not uncommon for a footman to go ahead with an axe and clear a passage for the vehicle. The possible routes were often waterlogged, dusty, deep in mud, or flooded by swollen rivers; consequently journeys were never highly undertaken. Those great roads that have been born of necessity are known as the great coaching roads and lead us west to Bath or Exeter; south to Portsmouth, Brighton or Dover; and north to York and Holyhead. Each one has contributed its share of adventure and romance to an historical past.

The Bath Road

The great west road to Bath, which partly includes an old Roman road, has witnessed many a romantic episode and all of its hundred and six miles are associated with famous historical and classical events. When Bath became a fashionable watering place, many men and women of fame might constantly have been seen on the road from London, and the old inn which marks its course could unravel many a fascinating story of the days when the great coaches and the post-chaises passed in fine weather or in foul, the drivers "fanning" or "toweling" their tired horses over a muddy road, up a steep incline, or through a portion of the country likely to be infected by highwaymen.

In the year 1773 the Exeter Fly started in the early dawn from the Bull and Gate, in Aldersgate, trusting that with luck it would arrive at Exeter in three days. The road out of the city was treacherous and almost impassable. The passengers were nervous. Had not the Bristol mail been robbed near Knightsbridge and was not a patrol of horse and foot on the road? Was not the Bath Flying Machine, coming in the opposite direction, snowed up at Colbrook—a district notoriously associated with highwaymen and those dreadful murders at the Coach Inn—and had not the Hounslow coach been tossed into a snowdrift at Salisbury?

The Fly, with its sleepy, nervous passengers, got away in safety, however, and breakfast would be served at the Pigeon in Brentford, seven miles away, while the horses were baited. Another rest would be made at the Coach and Horses, or the Catherine Wheel in Egham, and then the worst part of the journey out of Salisbury would begin. Half a century later the same journey would be done in much shorter time. The Comet, the Regulator or the Quicksilver would stop at Basingstoke, once the centre of the silk and woolen trade, the road would diverge in two directions at Andover, and there would be eighteen miles of desolate landscape when Salisbury had been reached.

Trip to Salisbury

An old and yellowing letter was written on a May morning a century ago. The paper was folded over and sealed, envelopes not having been invented, and some traveler returning by the same route would undertake to deliver it. The letter describes this very journey taken by a passenger from Buckinghamshire. "We left London at half past four, fortunately. On the journey a young gentleman made himself very agreeable and attentive and who should that be but young T. Drake? When he got on the coach at London, he asked me how far I was going, so I rejoined that I was to accompany him so far. I did not know who he was till we came to breakfast at Ilchester, when I heard the coachman say 'Drake,' and then I asked him. We arrived at Exeter at half past twelve and had lunch at the London Inn. I rode in great fear from Salisbury Plain. I sat in front and the steepness of the roads with the speed of the coach frightened me out of my wits. I shall never forget it. When we came within a few miles of Exeter, I got behind with my back to the horses, and then I was all right. I will take care not to face it again on coming back."

The cathedral raised in the twelfth century at Salisbury is a monument to the ingenuity and patience of Bishop Poore, and the neighborhood has known many a distinguished or royal visitor. Here is the Saracen's Head (once the Blue Boar), where the Duke of Buckingham, fleeing in disguise after an uprising against Richard III, had come to night, bravely met his fate on a block in the courtyard of the inn. Here Sir Walter Raleigh passed on his last journey to London before his execution, and here Charles II hid for a while after his defeat at Worcester.

The plain is bleak enough and the road to Exeter passes Stonehenge and crosses Sedge-moor. Many fugitives from the last battle fought on English soil fled from the moor, leaving their horses at Wood Yates Inn, and escaping on foot to the New Forest. At Basingstoke, some hundred and nineteen miles from Hyde Park Corner and more than five hundred feet above sea level, Judge Jeffreys held his court during the Bloody Assize, while three centuries ago Charles II, disguised as a countryman, was recognized in the yard of the Golden Lion by an ostler. A few miles further on the journey and the fly will rattle into Exeter and stop at the Old London, the New London, or the Half Moon, where rest and refreshment await the tired travelers. The owner of the Half Moon ran a coach called the Telegraph, which left Exeter at 6:30 a.m. and reached Hyde Park Corner at 9:30 p.m., a record rarely beaten on any road.

The Portsmouth Road

This road was one much traveled by royalty and associated with innumerable tragedies. Peppy took coach at Lamieth in 1698, via Putney Heath, and traveled the seventy-two miles to Portsmouth. The heath was a well-known duelling ground and the occupants of the coaches, had they a mind to it, could see the contestants engaged in their death-inviting struggle. Taking the Royal Mail at the Angel, St. Clements, about 7:30 in the evening, one could arrive at Portsmouth at 6:30 next morning. Passing Escher, the traveler is reminded of Thomas Wolsey, who retired to his country seat here when he fell from power. Robert, Lord Clive, also had a house at Escher called "Clarent," afterwards the residence of the exiled king, Louis Philippe of France.

On the Way Up to the Glacier on the Forbidden Plateau.

Guildford could boast many a fine inn, and at Abbots Hospital the Duke of Monmouth was lodged as a prisoner after the defeat at Sedgemoor. At pretty little Godalming was the King's Arms, famed for its choice dinners, and Charles II used to stay in a house nearby. After the ascent to Hindshead, the coach passed the Seven Thorns Inn, associated with terrible murders committed by smugglers in 1747. At the Spotted Dog in Portsmouth, the Duke of Buckingham was murdered by Lieutenant Felton, in the days of Charles I, just as he was preparing to lead an expedition to relieve the besieged Huguenots at La Rochelle.

Had indeed was the road to Brighton, but it was George IV who popularized it. There were, in fact, five roads to this favorite seaside resort, and had we lived in the days of Perilous Robinson, Fanny Burney or Mrs. Fitzherbert, we might have seen these well-known personages traveling on the popular royal road to the sea, the journey occupying over five hours.

The Dover Road

This old road was more historical and has been immortalized by Chaucer, whose pilgrims started seven centuries ago from the Old Tabard Inn, in Southwark, for the shrine of Thomas a-Becket at Canterbury. At the outset of the journey to Dover the road would pass Deptford, and in the sixteenth century the Golden Hind lay there while Queen Elizabeth went aboard to confer a knighthood on Sir Francis Drake. John Evelyn lived near Deptford, at Saye Court (now demolished), and Christopher Marlowe met his death while engaged in a pot-house scuffle at the inn. Seven miles from London Bridge is Blackheath, where Wolfe lived, his body being carried to burial at Greenwich. Every stretch of this road is steeped in romance and adventure. Before the seventeenth century the coach must pass Rochester, whose inns, the Bull and the White Hart, are associated with the names of Henry VIII, Queen Elizabeth, James I, the King of Denmark, and James II. Charles II stayed nearby at a place called Restoration House. At Sittingbourne, Henry V rested after his return from the Battle of Agincourt, which terminated his French war, the price of his dinner at the Red Lion being recorded at 9s. 6d. Lovers of Dickens will also have traveled this historical route when reading his gripping romance, "The Tale of Two Cities" (dramatized under the name of "The Only Way").

The North Roads

There were two great roads north, meeting at the Wheatsheaf Inn, Huntington. The coach left the Blue Boar or the George, at Holborn, and traveled via Shore-ditch and Ware, this route being a few miles shorter. A road of great adventure this! Did not John Gilpin ride involuntarily to Ware, and highwaymen of fame strike terror into the hearts of those who must travel its weary length? Hard by Barnet is a field where the final battle of the Wars of the Roses was fought, and Queen Elizabeth, when a girl, prisoner at Hatfield House, used to hunt in nearby woods. The Gunpowder conspirators laid their terrible plot at White Webbs, a lonely house in the middle of the chase, and the ancient inns that marked the northern road held many a secret of life and death. At the Angel, in Grantham, Richard III stayed and signed the death warrant of the Duke of Buckingham, who was beheaded at Salisbury. Charles I slept at the George, in Stamford, and at Burleigh House, close at hand, Dick Turpin is alleged to have stopped to rest his weary mare, Black Bess. Queen Elizabeth once rode north along this road, and on her death a man galloped furiously, ruining many a horse in his mad journey to Scotland. He was Sir Richard Cary, bent on announcing to James VI that he was now James I of England.

Another road branched to Holyhead via St. Alban's, Coventry, Birmingham and Shrewsbury, and people regulated their watches by the fast mail coaches. In 1600 this was merely a trail across open heaths, and it was along this road five years later that the originators of the Gunpowder Plot fled for safety. Some famous coaches traveled the 260 miles of the road, their record for speed being rarely beaten. A race between the Holyhead and Chester mails resulted in a bad accident, caused by the driver of the latter coach pulling his horses across the road where a heap of stones lay, overturning both vehicles and killing a passenger. The drivers were accused of manslaughter and were kept for six months in irons at St. Alban's awaiting their trial.

A twenty-foot snowdrift in 1836 found many a disappointed traveler compelled to break the journey at the Angel, the White Hart or the Woolpack Inn, in St. Alban's. It was not uncommon for all mails to stick in the mud on the north road at this spot. A well-known figure on the last stretch to London was Old Lal, a cripple. He had three fox hounds fastened abreast to a little cart, which he drove at a very high speed. One Winter's day he was found dead with one of the dogs beside him, and it is supposed that the animals had sighted a scurrying fox. The excitement of the chase evidently caused them to rush forward, dragging the little cart between two fir trees, for here the bodies were found.

Expert Drivers

The old coaching days, of course, provided expert drivers, whose names, with those of their coaches, are handed down to posterity. The Shrewsbury Wonder left the Bull and Mouth in London at half past six in the morning and arrived at ten in the evening. Sam Hayward, who drove the Wonder, could bring his team full trot up the hill towards the narrow entrance of the Red Lion Inn. He would pass the turning by a few yards and then, swinging the coach round in a short circle, would shoot under the archway with twelve inches to spare on either side. Everyone thought him mad and all other coaches took the precaution of entering by the back gate of the yard.

The coaches were usually of a dull, black leather studded with nails, and had four oval windows with heavy frames or red leather curtains. On the doors were written the names of the starting points and the final destination. With their huge springs, rounded roofs and floors strewn with straw, they were more picturesque than comfortable. A guard always held a carbine ready loaded and sat with the coachman over the boot. In sunshine or in drenching rain, in dripping fog and falling snow, the coach must attempt their tedious journey and make all possible speed, so that they would rock and strain in a manner warranted to set the stoutest heart quivering.

The famous old inns that dotted the coach roads provided warmth and food and a night's rest and were hailed with joy by the tired occupants of the coaches. They held a definite place in the heart of a nation and formed links in the social life of the people which will remain when many of the old buildings have fallen into decay.

MEMORIES OF MINE

By GERTRUDE F. HUNT.

Let us go back a quarter of a century, or more, to the days of our childhood, and try and recall some of the impressions we gained around the home and in the school. It is not difficult and does not require any great stretch of memory to take the winding roadway, in an old horse and buggy, to a snobbish village, now far from the capital of the Dominion.

There, to begin with, we have found the quiet and peaceful countryside dotted with prosperous farms surrounded by the old "snake fences." The wire-woven fence had not yet become a recognized part of the modern farm, unless it was in the vicinity of some of the larger centres. The road led through miles of orchards and cultivated vegetation, through scores of gates that swung on pivot posts, and on to the distant hills. On an Autumn evening one could smell the new-mown hay and sometimes catch a glimpse of a rabbit scurrying along the roadway. The valleys were cool and undisturbed by raucous sounds of autos and the like. To look back now it seems almost like a paradise, where happy days were not lost in the desire for things just beyond the reach. It was contentment without fear for the future.

The Farm Home

The old farm home sat grandly in the middle of acres of blossoming fruit trees and softly waving grasses, just striding in the Summer's afternoon-breeze. There were the long rows of green and the pasture lands beyond where stock roamed at will. A tiny creek wound its way through green rush banks and widened a little at the old water hole, where footprints of cows and horses showed in the wet, black soil. There was the old weather-beaten barn, with its peaked roof with four little apices with blue and red knobs that defied destruction from lightning; the lean-to sheds which housed the farm machinery during the long Winter months; the piles of wood for kitchen fuel, the farm pump that creaked a little but gave to man and beast his bit of purest water.

When day was done and the sun was setting low on the Western horizon, the farm was all ablaze with glowing cows and heavy, plodding horses that clanked their bits in eagerness for their evening meal; grumbling wagons loaded with the fruits of the harvest, and the shouts of farmhands, mingled with the loud welcome from the dogs. The scene always recalls the opening lines of Gray's Elegy:

"The curlew tells the knell of parting day,
The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea."

The stillness of the night is only excelled by the glories of the early morning, when the cock's crow calls man again to his labor and another day of days begins for young and old. There is something almost sacred in the old farm home, and its memories remain forever fresh in our minds. When we can look back with pleasure and with longing for the days that are gone, there is something for us, in later years, that all the wealth of a nation cannot buy—the priceless gems of childhood days.

The Old Schoolhouse

The little schoolhouse—no, it was not a little red schoolhouse—stood halfway up a hill, about a mile and a half from home. If ever it had shone in a coat of paint none was visible, but for all its rugged appearance it served the purpose of its day, and many a youngster owes a debt of deep gratitude to "teacher" for the patient care and stern discipline that gave to him or her the ground-work of an education that was to be of untold value in the years that were to come. How little we thought of the future. How much we thought of the present. When school was finished for the day and books were put away, our daily cares were left behind and we sought innocent pleasure in the green fields, roamed through the leafy glades, or tramped the mile or more back home to do the evening "chores."

In school the quiet hours were scarcely disturbed by the scratch of pencil on slate, as was hardly noticed. The big bluebottle sometimes buzzed against a windowpane, or a bee flitted from wall to wall as drowsy pupils watched its zigzag flight. Summer afternoons were mostly drowsy and thoughts that should have been intent upon the lessons wandered far afield. It was then that dreams of far-off lands found reality in the mind and many an exploit was planned and carried out with flashing sword. Fair maidens were rescued from their tormentors—and it was not infrequent that memory's fair maiden was not very far away.

A Desk at School

One can still recall the old-school desk. Maybe it had an initial roughly carved of whitened wood where some proud youth had tested the sharpness of a new knife. It was always scratched and bore much evidence of its former tenants. The inkwell boasted a tilting top—at one time—and was clipped and rattled in its socket. The desk was fastened to the floor that bore the marks of heavy boots. There were four rows of them, all facing to the front. And the blackboard. It had a corner cracked and a deep crevice in the middle, upon which teacher often broke the chalk. On special days and in special seasons colored birds and flowers adorned the blackened wall. Large scrolls had messages of greetings at the Christmastide.

As each old term passed and each new one began there seemed the passing of an age. New friends—and, sometimes, foes—were found. The beginning of September term always brought new frocks and coats and pants and shiny shoes. They seemed, somehow, to be part of the first week or two of the new school term, but it was strange how soon they lost their lustre and their shine. The new boy, or the new girl, sat timidly in their places. One could almost sympathize with the new ones. They seemed so lost and forlorn and alone among the chatter of the schoolroom.

Text Book Poetry

The school loves. The binding port, with his "roses are red and violets are blue," had become a part of the childhood days on the farm and in the school, and it seems as if it was much the same in every school. And of poetry, in the text books there is always one that seemed so appealing. The lines are not so familiar now, but they formed this thought:

"I hope some fellow will lend a hand
To help my mother, if she should stand
At a crossing, weary and old and grey,
When her own dear boy is far away."

And then there was "Oft in the Sully Night," "Young Lochinvar," "The Village Blacksmith," "Breathe There, a Man With Soul So Dead," recited in a very grave and serious tone, and the one to "My Mother." There were many others. Thousands learned them by heart and thousands cherish them today.

And so, as I draw my blinds and leave behind me the reveries of the past, I turn to my radio and I hear the strains of a dance music, and I think how far we have come along life's highway.

Lynched Public Enemy

KUO, the most hated bandit in Hopei Province, China, widely known as "The King of Hell" and "Northern Heaven-Seller," has been lynched by the citizens he terrorized for so long.

Head of a group of bandits in the region north of the tombs of the Ming Dynasty, Kuo kidnapped farmers, held up travelers on mountain roads, and treated his captives so cruelly that the entire population hated him as much as they feared him.

Nationalist militia trapped Kuo in Iron Stone Village. The inhabitants asked the village elders to permit them to execute Kuo by the "Death of a Thousand Sticks," but the elders refused. But Kuo was seized and the villagers began the execution. He was still alive after his legs had been hacked to pieces, and then he was placed on a huge pyre, which was kept burning all night.

Next day police could not find even one villager who would admit he saw the execution.

The object of cold storage of commercial vegetables is to prevent them from drying and shriveling and to stop the development of mould and rots. Most vegetables can be placed in cold storage, but too much stress cannot be laid on the necessity of first pre-cooling them at a temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit when most of the heat will be taken off.

THIS WEEK'S BEST BOOKS

By LIBRARIAN SERVICE

THE books on this list cover a variety of subjects and should appeal to many readers. Some of the books deal with questions of current interest; foremost among these are "Idea of National Interest," by Charles Beard, and "Railway Nationalization in Canada," by Leslie Fournier. Mr. Fournier takes up in detail the breeding of dairy cattle as a first step towards rebuilding agriculture. He tells how to compute bull-indexes—which under the leadership of Mount Hope are rapidly coming into general use—and of the advantages of interbreeding breeds. It is a book for the practical farmer and for all who are interested in reducing the cost of milk and increasing the farmer's profit. It is more than that, however, for it tells the story of the astonishing advance in agriculture from the time when milk was taken only "on the advice of an able physician," and in very small quantities and cattle were kept primarily for draught animals and to supply beef.

"Breeding Profitable Dairy Cattle," by E. Parmelee Prentice, purposes to do for agriculture in the twentieth century by application of the new knowledge of inheritance as much as was done in the nineteenth century by the invention of agricultural machinery. Mr. Prentice takes up in detail the breeding of dairy cattle as a first step towards rebuilding agriculture. He tells how to compute bull-indexes—which under the leadership of Mount Hope are rapidly coming into general use—and of the advantages of interbreeding breeds. It is a book for the practical farmer and for all who are interested in reducing the cost of milk and increasing the farmer's profit. It is more than that, however, for it tells the story of the astonishing advance in agriculture from the time when milk was taken only "on the advice of an able physician," and in very small quantities and cattle were kept primarily for draught animals and to supply beef.

"Women Workers Through the Depression," edited by L. Fournier, supplements the study made three years ago by the American Woman's Association under the title, "The Trained Woman and the Economic Crisis." The two together make an interesting and important report on how women of this class have been affected by the depression, and they have met the situation, and how it has affected them.

"Secondary Education," by T. H. Bragg, ventures to present and to open for further discussion some of the basic problems that must be solved before our secondary schools can find themselves and advance toward the great contribution it is possible for them to make to social and cultural progress. It offers not so much a picture of what is, as a vision of what may be. In a sense, most to the chapters, directly or indirectly, concern the new curriculum that will be functional in a democratic society. The facts of current practice are fairly well collected and presented.

"Idea of National Interest," by Charles Austin Beard and George Howard Smith, is an analytical study of the meaning and use of the term "national interest" in foreign policy, the growth of the doctrine in America, and its application to problems of territorial and commercial expansion.

"Europe Between Wars" by Hamilton Fish Armstrong, briefly summarizes the political and international situation as it was in Europe in the Spring of 1934, stressing the aspects which may lead to another great war. The author is the editor of Foreign Affairs, and he knows the nations of Europe and their personalities intimately. Mr. Armstrong's book is obviously not an exhaustive study, but it is particularly revealing concerning the Austro situation and French policy, and should be useful to anyone who wishes to read the newspaper intelligently.

"Railway Nationalization in Canada," by Leslie Fournier, discusses the problem of the Canadian National Railways. In a general way the subject-matter of this book may be divided into three parts. The first tells the story of the nationalization of railways in Canada. The second analyzes the operating and financial results of the National Railway system and its private competitor, the Canadian Pacific. The third discusses the outstanding problems that have developed in the course of the last fifteen years, and gives an analysis of proposed remedies. The book is a most important contribution to the whole question of Canada and her railways.

"Handbook of Print Making and Print Makers," by John Taylor Arms gives a description of the principal methods of print making and a succinct history of each, including a review of the important artists who used each method. Some of the subjects discussed are: Etching and dry point, line engraving, woodcut and wood engraving, mezzotint, aquatint, color printing, lithography, various processes. An appendix gives a thirty-five-page identically list of artists.

"New Pathways in Science," by Sir Arthur Eddington, brings together the results of further study of modern science and of the philosophical outlook to which it leads. This book is based upon the Messenger lectures delivered at Cornell University in 1934. Among the subjects treated are determinism, probability, the constitution of the stars and nebulae, sub-atomic energy, and the significance of the constants of Nature.

"White-Headed Eagle," by Richard G. Montgomery, is a biography of a great adventurer who turned his vision and his talents as a leader and a diplomat to the fur trade of the North-West in the first half of the nineteenth century. John McLoughlin as a young man entered the employ of the Hudson's Bay Company—the rival of the Hudson's Bay Co., married an Indian half-breed of remarkable character, worked for the union of the two warring companies, and finally became chief factor of the Hudson's Bay Co. in the vast Columbia River region and founder of the trading post at Vancouver. His biography is not only fascinating reading; it is a distinct contribution both to the history of the American and Canadian North-West.

"Problem of Noise," by F. C. Bartlett, contains in a somewhat expanded form the two Heath Clark lectures which Professor Bartlett delivered recently at the invitation of the National Institute of Industrial Psychology. The subject which he chose is one of extreme interest at the moment; newspaper campaigns have been recently conducted and societies have lately been established. The book contains a concise account of the results of recent reliable investigations concerning the distracting, irritating and harmful effects of noise. First, the author asks: What do we understand by noise; why and when do sounds become nuisances, and under what conditions and by what mental processes do we become "adapted" to such nuisances.

By MARION ISRAEL ARNOLD

"Love in Winter" Alfred A. Knopf, by Storm Jameson.

Modern life is complex not only in its social and economic ramifications, but in the fundamental things like love and existence. Both Hervey Russell and his cousin, Nicholas Rosby, were separated from their respective spouses, and their love should have been a simple enough thing. But it wasn't. They themselves were odd sort of people, and instead of following a natural path, they created complications. Nicholas, a disillusioned product of the war, had been molded into a man who needed a woman's tenderness, yet was too self-absorbed to make an effort to win and keep his first wife, and later Hervey.

Hervey was a novelist and her greatest interest in life until the advent of Nicholas had been her son, Richard. She was reluctant to involve herself emotionally with Nicholas, yet was impelled by her very femininity and his most apparent need to respond to the attraction between them. She faced the situation boldly and knew that she must always have the responsibility for the war that had drained something from Nicholas that mere existence, or even love, could not replace.

Tied up with this personal conflict, the author has introduced the wider issues of the day, and brought in questions of capitalism, socialism, and problems confronting both the poor and the rich. The scene flashes into all strata of city life and for contrast shifts to a little seaside town which hitherto had escaped the blight of modernity. The book is a criticism of the social problems of the day, as well as a vivid story of the efforts of two serious and unhappy people to readjust themselves to existence.

NEW ALL-TIME HIGH

By Seymour Winslow

SOMEONE in the small temporary grandstand overlooking the improvised paddock said breathlessly: "There's Dunc McNichol!"

Nine college girls, three debutantes and five married women dropped everything, looked up and each for her own part started to check every man in sight.

The word flew around. The name reached new ears. Discreet lips spoke quickly.

"Where? Which one?"

The scheduled equestrian events of the Armataux Neighborhood Mid-Summer Horse Show continued. But they continued for the lady spectators as a second string attraction. The tall young man with the astonishing good looks and physique who wore his white whips and mahogany boots so perfectly and who stood conversing with friends over the ancient Harrington tallyho was Rosanne Goddard, pressed an elbow into Abby Thorpe sitting beside her.

"Do you see him?" she whispered, keeping her own gaze riveted.

"What? See who?" Abby went on watching a chestnut single-footer that moved across the meadow with the grace of a swan.

"The McNichol Dunc!"

"Oh. Saw him when he first came. Thought I did." Abby consulted her program.

"I wish they'd have the gaited horses next."

"Well, why didn't you say something?" Rosanne held the focus. "I'd certainly very much hate to be as judged as you manage to seem. I'll bet you didn't see him at all. Because how would you know him?"

Abby turned to her patiently. "How would I know Mussolini if I should see him? I recognized the great Dunc from about a million published photographs and at once went completely weak inside. I hope that makes me regular."

"You're no woman at all. More like Cica."

"Call me unawakened, Roe. I've always loved being called unawakened."

Rosanne continued to let both retinas record at full shutter.

"Abby, do you believe the one about the beautiful Eurasian?"

"What one about what beautiful Eurasian?"

"Oh, Abby, he's going to ride! Why, it was in China. Some Chinese bandits abducted this girl and then Dunc McNichol—"

Abby's eyes had wandered to a row of youngsters who sat on a top fence rail like angels in jodhpurs. "Aren't they ducks?" she exclaimed. "Go on."

"Oh, skip it," Rosanne sighed.

A hush came upon the grandstand. Dunc McNichol followed by every eye, crossed a stretch of grass and mounted a high-backed roan. He sat well. But had he sat any way at all so far as his gallery was concerned there was but one entry in the touch-and-out for three-year-olds.

Dunc McNichol had been a Name ever since he was a sophomore in college six years before. Now, at twenty-four, he was a more fabulous one than ever. There was no danger at all of his being superseded. A more spectacular performer than Dunc McNichol in his own line was inconceivable. He was to the girls of his generation what a composite of Richard Harding Davis, Rupert of Hentzau and the Duke of the Abruzzi would have been to their grandmothers. Dunc McNichol was the symbol and embodiment of romance.

It had started with Carmelita McNichol (nee Gutierrez) impressing upon her little boy the importance of the chivalric code. Since in Dunc's Eurasian every other strand was that of a noble Andalusian mantilla, the precepts took hold. Ten years later he had an established campus and hall-room reputation for impulsive gallantry. Dunc McNichol became a midnight legend in the dormitories of a dozen women's colleges. Periodically he fell in love. He jeweled each affair with acts of burning romanticism. A McNichol saga grew up. Reporters, photographers and gawping girls did the rest.

The high-backed roan, Dunc McNichol up, touched and was eliminated the fourth time around. A faint moan rose from the distaff portion of the grandstand.

Circling the floor at Highland Country Club on the evening of the horse show, Abby was listening with tremendous interest to what a young man in West Point uniform had been seeing and doing at Aberdeen Proving Ground when she felt his gray arm slipping away. His operation trailed off and she found herself dancing with a new partner.

"Hello, Abby Thorpe," said the cut-in.

"Well, who are you?" she asked looking up. Then, having seen who he was, she said: "Oh!"

"Family name, McNichol." He guided her nicely toward open floor.

It was in his favor, Abby thought, that he didn't go around assuming everybody knew him.

"That Lever should have asked!" she said identifying the famous McNichol face.

"Well, I asked about you when I first saw you. This afternoon. Let's slide out," he said. "There are three or four dangerous-looking men closing in."

He whisked Abby across the threshold to the bogia and down the fieldstone steps to a gravelled path.

"Since we're where it's quiet," she said, "I'd better find out something for a friend of mine. About a beautiful Eurasian, I think. Did it happen or didn't it?"

Dunc halted their walk and gazed down at her for a long moment. "You don't care anything about it yourself, do you?" he asked.

"Not a bit," she said truthfully.

It was all very dizzying, thought Abby. Here she'd come up to Rosanne Goddard at Pawling for a week-end, thinking about little or nothing, and next she was walking down a moonlit path through the Summer night with Dunc McNichol.

Pausing right where they were he turned her toward him and brought his lips to hers in a way that was nothing at all like the push in the face that most men called a kiss.

"I did sort of think," she said standing off from him, "that Dunc McNichol would have selected a scented hower or a moon-drenched hilltop."

AND so that was what it was to be kissed by Dunc McNichol. As an experience it fell into the class with the first time Abby used a shore-to-ship telephone, the time she told her father, two days out at sea, that Champlott Highland Tess of Parsipany had had her puppies okay.

"Now here!" said Dunc. "I wasn't putting on an act, with settings. I kissed you because when you first saw me tonight and said, 'Oh! there was something to simply beautiful about your mouth that kissing you was all I could think of.' Listen," he pleaded, "forget all those fool yarns about me. Let other people believe 'em if they want to. Don't you."

"But there must be something to some of them," Abby persisted.

"Fiction. Or pretty much so."

"Well, you can't deny the one about Princess Gerda's glove. That was in every paper for weeks."

Dancing again, Abby caught Dunc's eyes on her every time she looked around. Rosanne, whirling past her, hissed the word, "Seductress!" People were noticing. He cut in again and swept Abby off the floor and into the lounge.

"How about tomorrow, Abby?"

"Tomorrow I rush home. Morristown."

"Guess I could find my way there. How about Monday evening?"

Abby supposed that thrills should be running up and down her spine. She felt only astonishment.

"Monday evening, a rehearsal. And every evening after that too." She explained she had a part in the new piece at the Ciderpress Theatre, Morristown's summer tryout house.

"A triumph of casting!" he beamed on her admiringly. "I'll be there."

"But you can't come to rehearsals."

"I can call for and deliver, can't I?"

She told him how to find the house and warned him she had to get started as early as seven-fifteen.

Most of the stories told of Dunc McNichol were wholly true. A few were rank inventions. As for the one about Princess Gerda's glove—it had amounted to an international incident.

Mrs. Thorpe on Monday evening managed to be close behind the maid when the doorbell rang, but before she could get Dunc into the living-room for coffee Abby shrieked from upstairs.

"If that's Dunc, don't let him sit down because we're starting this minute!"

She shoved him out to his car, thus depriving her mother, the stupefied maid and her twelve-year-old sister, Joan, of all but a breath-taking glimpse. Ten minutes later they were parked back of the Ciderpress Theatre.

"I told you this was perfectly silly," Abby said. "Since you can't possibly come in, what'll you do out here?"

"Think of you," Dunc assured her, "in there, being forthright."

"Oh, I shouldn't have let you come."

"You couldn't have stopped me."

It was the beginning of a prompt and dependable taxi service. After rehearsal she would swing out westward over the hills, or down along the red clay roads toward the sea to hit the shore at Long Branch. Abby couldn't understand Dunc's having no other dates. She had always thought of Dunc McNichol as sort of lionizing his way through twenty-four fast social hours a day. The legendary Dunc began to fade. The real Dunc was just as nice and simple as anybody she'd ever known.

Three days before the premiere, Abby got to the theatre to find she wasn't needed at evening rehearsal. Dunc's jaws were working and his mouth was full as she got back to the car. He threw some paper-wrapped notes into the door.

"What are you munching at—Dunc—sitting out here like Dante?"

"Pettis fure," he lied trying to conceal a sandwich crust.

Abby was suspicious. "And what you threw over the fence just now was a demitasse, I suppose."

"Well—actually it was a piece of pie," he confessed.

"Dunc! Do you have dinner these nights?"

"Certainly do! I—that is, I pick it up en route."

"You pick up a package lunch at a drug store, is that it?"

"Yes. It's like this, Abby: The elder McNichol, for whom I work, is one of the last doggers. That means I'm chained to a desk till five-thirty. So then—well, to get over here by seven-fifteen—oh, anyway, I'm no great trencherman."

Abby couldn't think of anything to say except to tell him he was a gooney. She was touched. She felt a rush of fondness for Dunc, sitting out here in the night waiting for her and eating cold food.

The opening of "Petunia Border" was a standing-room-only event. Abby's dressing-room looked like the outgoing delivery platform of a wholesale florist.

Off in one corner stood a exotic potted plant. It was an unbelievable exotic-looking thing with green spatulate leaves and three gorgeous blooms that looked like small tropical birds alighting on the end of the coral-blue stalks. There was no card with it. It needed none. Only Dunc could have sent it.

Abby had a flash of curiosity as to just what pains Dunc had been at to get this incredible plant and at once felt deeply ashamed of herself. What a mean soul she was! She hadn't used to be that way. And yet there had been girls for whom Dunc had turned the world upside down.

"It's a bird-of-paradise flower," Dunc informed her, driving home. "A member of the banana family they told me. Grows in Capetown."

Capetown? Abby's heart leaped. Could he have called for it, had it sent specially all that way?

As the car coursed a long concrete curve through black woods Dunc said quietly, "Abby, the reason I've fallen in love with you is because you don't expect a man to put on a performance all the time. Jump through hoops. Be a howling exhibitionist, sentimentally speaking. That part you took in the show, now—that girl was you. To the life."

Yes, she had been very like that girl, Abby realized. But that was before she met Dunc. She had changed.

It was after her sixth performance that Sid Landsmann, the producer, brought on a saturnine-looking man whom he introduced to Abby as "Mr. Moss, of the pictures."

"Ever think of Hollywood?" Mr. Moss asked Abby straight off.

"Only when I want to get the giggles," Abby told him.

Sid Landsmann broke in to explain that Mr. Moss was a studio scout with a reputation for picking them.

"What Hollywood needs," stated Mr. Moss.

The motorboat nosed alongside and Dunc hoisted the protesting Abby to a pontoon.

gloomily, "is a lot less of the old school-of-acting stuff. More naturalness. I can't promise you a thing. But neither could anybody promise Hepburn anything."

Abby was flattered. She tucked Mr. Moss' card in her bag and hurried off to the waiting Dunc.

"I'll be glad when you're through with this show business," he said, "and back to private."

"Knew I had something to tell you!" Abby broke in and related the Mr. Moss incident.

Dunc was appalled. He led her firmly toward the house and into the lighted library, where he took both her hands possessively.

"But you wouldn't think of such a thing?"

Abby hadn't intended to think of it, but she said, "Well, why not?" and thrilled to see his harrowed look.

"Because you're going to marry me of course—you with your cute surprised little face!"

SHE didn't answer him in words. She closed her eyes and imagined they were standing out among the asters again, where they certainly should have been for this particular moment.

"I must apologize in advance for something, Abby. The newspaper lullabial you'll get when we announce our engagement. They're relish everything—drag up my past. And there's no way out of it."

They kept the engagement secret for three weeks, then told both families. The Thorpes were dumfounded and pleased. The McNichols of Glen Nichol, Long Island, were delighted.

Abby spent Thanksgiving week at Glen Nichol and she and Dunc rode every day. From the McNichol stables, Abby chose Sass, a pretty bay mare. Coming down through a russet hollow one afternoon Sass shied, then reared, then started off on a dead run. Sass was not really hollow, Abby knew.

But she realized at once with thumping heart that Dunc, pounding along behind on his hunter, saw the thing as a genuine runaway. He was racing to overtake her.

The old Abby would have pulled the mare in and made her behave. But the new Abby thought of the senorita and the bull-charging animal, apparent danger, Dunc to the rescue. She gave Sass her head. Presently, in just a second now, Dunc would surge up beside her, circle her waist with an arm, swing her up—

The horses were neck and neck. It was the moment for that arm. But no arm came. Dunc, leaning downward and forward, grabbed the bridle of the frolicking Sass and brought her to a canter. He did it perfectly. But he did no more than a Central Park policeman might have done for an utter stranger.

"Abby! Frightened? No, of course you aren't!"

"But I am too!" she heard herself say defensively. To carry it off she added, "I'm in a fainting condition" and managed to laugh.

Toward mid-December Rosanne, talking long-distance, suggested an evening in town. "Unless you two are in dead storage."

And the evening turned out to be fun. Dancing with Dunc, Abby felt the envy of every girl in the place. It was a satisfaction. But she wondered what they would have said had they known that as his fiancée her life was as devoid of high romance as that of a termite.

As they sped beneath the Hudson River to Jersey, Abby missed her bag.

"Much in it, darling?" Dunc asked.

"No wealth. But it's the only petit point I ever liked." She was pretty sure she'd left it at the hotel.

"They'll hang on to it for you," Dunc promised her. "They'll easily identify it as belonging to the most beautiful girl in the room."

It came to her that Dunc McNichol had there such a special trip to Europe to return a glove to a princess. They emerged from the tunnel and Dunc headed off toward Morristown, where he was spending the night.

"Pick it up for you first thing tomorrow and shoot it over by messenger. Okay, little Abby."

They said good night in front of a dying log fire, and the truth of things came chillingly to Abby. Dunc didn't love her.

"Going to bed," she said, not trusting her voice. Then unable to hold in, went on, "Is there such a difference, after all, between a royal glove and my evening bag?"

"Glove, Abby? Why, what—don't tell me you're harking back to one of my old lapses?" He tried to take her hand. "Here we're sitting quietly and sleepily together when—"

"Sitting quietly—that exactly it!" Abby knew she was talking like a capricious little fool. But she couldn't stop.

"But, darling," Dunc argued reasonably, "you couldn't believe I'd let your bag stay lost! Tomorrow, first thing—"

"Oh, it isn't the bag!" Abby commanded herself not to go on and went right on. "The day Sass bolted—well, she almost bolted. Oh, of course, you caught her headle. But when some—duddy senorita—in a red dress, I suppose—had a bull take after her—"

Dunc, his face flushed and concerned, tried to interrupt, but Abby stonewalled on: "My opening night at the Ciderpress. Every one everywhere knows you once practically denounced the State of Virginia to get white devils for some Sally or Nancy or Lucy. And what you sent me," Abby waited, "was a member of the banana family. Banana!"

"It was eight o'clock next morning when Abby put in her first call for the New York office of Mr. Moss of Fine Art Films. No one answered. She followed it with calls at five-minute intervals and at nine-fifteen got a secretary. Mr. Moss was in Hollywood, and would be there for several months.

"Let it go," said Abby. "I'll see him there. I'm just leaving."

There was a more exciting, a more romantic way to go to California than weaving across the country inside of a steel worm. There were gay white ships that traversed phosphorescent seas; there was dancing on deck beneath a Caribbean moon.

Mrs. Thorpe never knew precisely how she got aboard the St. Anselmo. Abby had said merely, "I'm going. Mother—I'm going alone if I have to. You may come with me or not, as you wish." Mrs. Thorpe invoked the name of Dunc McNichol and was silenced. Hopefully she brought Abby her evening bag, delivered early by special courier, presented as proof of Dunc's devotion. Abby looked at it coldly achingly, and tossed it aside.

Abby was "out" to Dunc's phone calls at nine-thirty, ten and ten-thirty. At three minutes before a moon sailing, mother and daughter were deposited in an ocean-going suite with a private veranda.

ABBY woke next morning knowing that Dunc by now had got her letter, the letter she mailed at the dock. In torturing fancy, she read it with him—rather let her say you were mistaken about your feelings. I shall always—best if you don't reply—best for us both.

The ship docked for eight hours in Havana, Abby, at the waterside rail, didn't care whether this was Havana or Saskatoon.

She didn't hear the sound of footsteps along the deck. Next, there stood Dunc, in a leather jacket, corduroys and rubber-soled shoes.

"Come on, Abby—we're going!" he commanded.

How had he ever got there? Going? Going somewhere with Dunc?

"No, Dunc. I won't. I never will!"

Dunc looked so strange, sort of blazing and happy and determined.

"No? Well, here we go!" he said and swung her up from the deck in both arms.

Abby gathered her wits enough to scream. She couldn't go with Dunc wherever it was he was going. She started kicking. Dunc clamped her legs tighter. "Stop it, or I'll spank you pink!" he growled.

A knot of ship's officers, standing about the lower end of the gangplank, heard the row and looked up. Then one of them started up just as Dunc started down. The others massed around the plank's end, blocking the way to the pier. Abby saw Dunc's face light up as he perceived his opportunity.

He tucked Abby around to one side, turned his other shoulder forward and plunged on. The man coming up, was knocked staggering into the group below. One of them went down. Dunc hurdled the body, landed on the boarding and ran to the far side of the pier.

At the foot of a perpendicular ladder lay a battered little outboard motorboat. A black man and one not so black turned piratical faces upward, as Dunc, with Abby swung sacklike under one arm, clambered down. The black man placed a huge bare foot against the dock and shoved. The motor caught. The boat surged outward. Whistles sounded on the pier and there was the sound of pounding feet. A ship's officer stood fingering a gun and shouting, then-fired three shots into the air.

"Dunc!" said Abby tensely, "you've got to turn around. Got to! This is kidnapping, that's what it is!"

"Put me ashore—right now!" directed Abby and was ignored.

Out in the harbor a seaplane rode the swells, three propellers turning idly. As the motorboat made for it, there came from shoreward the scream of a siren. The harbor police had unhindered a pursuit boat.

"I know it is!" he exulted. "And that's what it's intended to be! Not a bad snatch for my first!"

THE police boat, parting the water into white-plumes, leaped into sight. The seaplane just ahead answered the challenge. With a roar of motors it taxied in, then turned to head seaward and slowed again.

A door of the cabin swung open. The motorboat nosed alongside and Dunc hoisted the protesting Abby to a pontoon.

Abby pulled her up to the wing. Dunc slapped a wad of bills into the hand of the bass buccanier and climbed after Abby. The door banged. From a window, a moment later, Abby saw the police boat dwindle to a water-log with a forked tail.

"Now then," said Dunc, "where would you like to be married?"

"I wouldn't like to be married!" Abby tried to look at him with abhorrence and failed.

"We stay up until you decide. How about Florida? Good place. Could phone your mother from there too."

One of the two police boats on the glass grimed and pointed onward. A monoplane had appeared from somewhere and fallen in behind them.

"I hope it's the police," said Abby.

"Well, it isn't. It's reporters and photographers. They trailed me out of Newark and caught me chartering this ship at Miami. What do you say, Abby—a honeymoon at Palm Beach?"

Reporters and photographers. He thrust upon Abby that Dunc McNichol never had done as romantic a thing as this in all his life. It amounted to marriage by capture—exactly that! The feeling of restless expectancy that had been with her since that night she first thought she might fall in love with Dunc—the night she had caught him sailing sandwiches outside the Ciderpress Theatre—that feeling was gone. Marriage by capture! Why, Dunc loved her more than he had loved all the others put together. For her he had hit a new all-time high.

Dunc was saying, "You see, Abby, I had some things wrong, I guess. About you, I mean. But a fellow learns."

Darling Dunc, pleading with her—as if he had any need to plead with her—ever had had or ever would have.

"Palm Beach," she said and didn't care how rapturous she sounded. "We'll both catch a swim!"

HESBA STRETTON

By ETHEL REYMOUR

THIS is the century year of the birth of the fourth child and third daughter of Benjamin Smith, a Shropshire bookseller and publisher, of New Street, Wellington, whose wife had strongly embraced the Evangelical form of faith.

Four more children came, and when the little Sarah was eight her mother died. She was then sent to the Old Hall, Wellington, a large and excellent private school; but the core of her education lay in her mother's teaching, her father's bookshop, and the celebrities who frequented it.

She was intensely Evangelical, and therefore, in harmony with her times. Shy and retiring, her chief delight was reading; her recreation writing stories.

She had reached the age of twenty-six, when, having decided upon a literary career, she adopted a pseudonym composed of the initial letters of the names of her sisters and her own, "H. E. S. B. A." The "Sisters" were from All Stretton, near Church Stretton, in Shropshire, where her sister Ann owned property. Henceforth, she used her pseudonym to the entire exclusion of her parental and baptismal names.

It was, therefore, as Hesba Stretton, that Dickens became acquainted with her literary abilities.

First Acceptance

H. E. S. B. A.'s eldest sister, Elizabeth, her elum and lifelong companion, thought so well of Hesba's stories that she sent, secretly, to the editor of Household Words a tale entitled "The Lucky Peg." Dickens published it, sent £5 (£25 for it, and expressed his willingness to consider other stories. This began a close friendship, and for seven years Household Words usually had a Christmas story by Hesba Stretton.

In 1863, the two sisters left their Shropshire home and went to Manchester.

The story which first brought widespread recognition was a serial published in The Sunday at Home in 1866. It appeared in book form in 1867. Its popularity was immediate and lasting.

It is known everywhere as "Jessica's First Prayer."

It is an accurate description of desolate child life in large cities, and contains "personal investigation of slum conditions." It was translated into every known European language and Asiatic and African tongues wherever missionaries have penetrated. It has been produced in Braille. Over half a million copies have been sold, and the present Evangelical trend may sponsor fresh issues.

Lord Shaftesbury—the Children's Friend—commended it. By order of Tsar Alexander II a copy was placed in every school in Russia.

"Little Meg's Children" and "Mona in London" were published in 1868 and 1869, respectively and together reached a circulation of three-quarter million.

Religious Stories

IN 1870, after traveling abroad, the sisters settled at Bayswater, London. By 1906 the Religious Tract Society had published thirty volumes of her work—chiefly religious stories. But "The Clives of Peveril," "David Lloyd's Easy Walk" and "The Doctor's Dilemma" are full-length novels.

Bernard Shaw appropriated the last title for his book.

AN EXCITING HUNT

(Concluded)

"MY word, Mary! If no one finds the money it is ours," said Bob, "but if they do we will make them work for it first."

Next night, at 9 o'clock, ten cars, set out in search of the treasure. Nigel and Joan were together, but both Mr. and Mrs. Parry felt too tired to come.

"Let's get well away, Joan," said Nigel, "and when we have lost sight of all the other cars we will try to solve the first clue. It looks as if they mean us to use our brains all right."

Joan quickly solved the first riddle, and for the next three hours they followed clues, correct and otherwise.

"I think we must be getting pretty warm," said Nigel, as they drew up at last at the empty house, "and I think we must be the first, for we haven't seen any sign of the others. You get out, Joan, and I will drive the car out of sight, so as not to give away our whereabouts."

Slowly and rather cautiously the two walked up the drive, which was green with weeds and overhung by massive trees which rustled unpleasantly.

"We deserve something after this," said Nigel. "And we even have to penetrate upstairs, don't we?"

"It will take me all my courage to go in at all," replied Joan.

Rather to their surprise the door opened with a turn of the handle. Nigel led the way, and up creaking stairs the two climbed.

"I'm glad I remembered to bring a torch," said Joan, making good use of it and rather reluctantly following her brother into one of the rooms.

"Quick, quick, Joan! Out with that light!" cried Nigel. "What are those men doing just below this window?"

Joan entered to see Nigel crouching at the window. With sinking heart she crossed the room. Three men were speaking roughly to one another, and fragments of their conversation drifted upwards.

"Didn't get the jewelry?" . . . Thought you were being tracked? . . . You know no one dares to come near this house at night."

Nigel and Joan drew back and looked at each other. Nigel spoke.

"I expect you'll think I am absolutely mad," he said, "but I am sure these are the Old Manor House burglars, and we have stumbled on their hiding-place by accident. I should not be at all surprised if the cellars were full of stolen goods."

"Whatever are we to do?" whispered Joan, feeling frightened.

"We must get out of here at once. Then you must drive the car into the town and fetch help, and I will hang about here to keep an eye on the men's movements, and also to wait off any of the party who may turn up. Of course, we may be making idiots of ourselves," he added, "but I think it is worth the risk."

Quickly but noiselessly the two left the house, running down the grass border of the drive so that their footsteps might not be heard.

"Hurry up, Joan! You get into the car; you will not need to start the engine until you are right out of earshot. The car will easily glide down this hill if I give it a start."

Apart from leaving Nigel, Joan was only too thankful to drive away. Before long she had reached the police station, and exclaimed out her message.

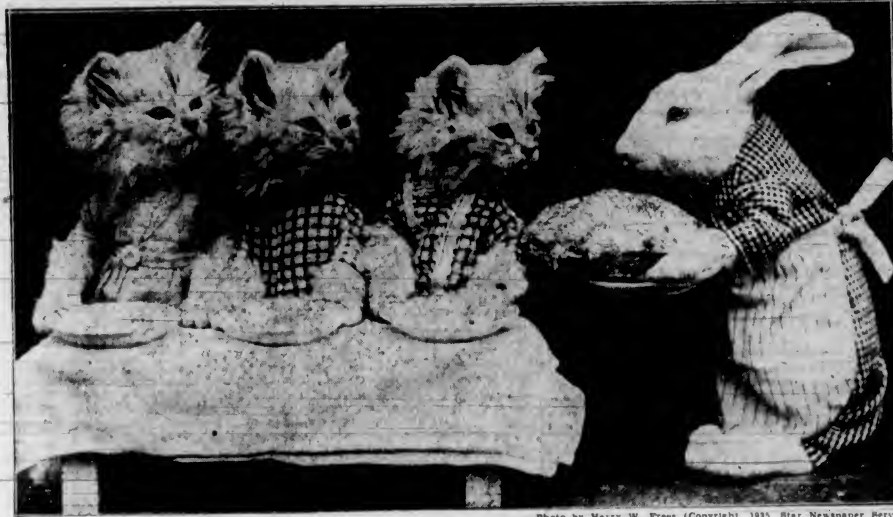

The police, anxious to snatch at any clue however slight, wasted no time. They all arrived back at the empty house just in time to catch the three men beating a hasty retreat with some of the most valuable of the possessions.

Things turned out much as Nigel had thought. For months these burglars had been using the cellars as their hiding-place for stolen goods, trading on the fact that no one dared to approach the house owing to the tales that were abroad about it. They only visited the house after dark, and often shipped their goods to the Continent without anyone's being any the wiser. However, tonight, on finding the door unlocked, their suspicions had been aroused, and they were preparing to flee.

As well as being the winners in the real treasure hunt, Nigel and Joan were entitled to a very large reward for leading to the recovery of the stolen goods, but this they insisted upon sharing with all the other members of the hunt.

"That was almost too exciting a treasure hunt," muttered Joan to herself some time later, as she nestled into her bed and drew the clothes well over her head.

Really Shocked at Such a Greedy Cat

"Fresh lobster! Good!" cries greedy Fan—the kitten on the right.

"It's lovely! (sniff). The very smell gives me an appetite!"

Her little friends are really shocked at such a greedy cat—One should be interested in food, but not as much as that!

And oh, the awful way she ate. I fear I have to tell.

She nearly cracked her two front teeth upon that lobster shell!

Brotherly Love Rules This Community

THIS is the title of a story published recently by The Halifax Chronicle. It was written by Mrs. Flora S. Rogers, a sister of Mr. Harry L. Smith, principal of our High School. From it some paragraphs will be selected, for the whole article is too long for this page. You must try to picture to yourselves the real banks of river and sea with the small, neatly fenced fields of clover, grain and vegetables that surround the village.

"Remote from the busy rush of the outside world, there has grown up near the shores of the Belle River in Prince Edward Island, a community founded on the principles of peaceful co-operation and brotherly love."

"This community evolved from an ideal which was held by the founder, Ben Compton, whose ancestors came with the United Empire Loyalists and settled at Quaco, near Saint John, more than a hundred years ago. He later came to the island and a community, part of which lives at Bangor and part at Belle River, is the outcome of his idea."

"The Compton family at Belle River has evolved a practical scheme where happy and contented people live in comfortable surroundings. The homes which house 100 members of the community are up to date and well furnished. Modern radios and other musical instruments are part of their equipment. The happy, intelligent faces of the children, and the calm, philosophic outlook of those older in years are ample proof that their system of co-operative community enterprise works."

"Added to these are the prosperous saw mills fitted up with modern machinery which busily saw up spruce and pine logs into lumber and box shooks. Schooners owned by the family carry on a trade with nearby towns in the Maritime Provinces and local firms and others are supplied with lumber from the Compton mills."

Principal Industry

"THE milling of lumber is their principal industry, but all the farm produce necessary to feed its members is raised on the extensive Compton acres. In former years extra farm produce was sold outside, but this year only enough for the needs of the community is under cultivation, because of low market prices."

Mrs. Rogers tells of the plans of community living taught by Plato, Sir Thomas More and Bellamy and practised by Hubbard and the makers of Community Place in more recent years, and says that:

"In the Compton community these ideals of economic equality hold true. When the different families are in need of groceries, they go to the central store, where their wants are attended to. No money is required. They simply ask for what they want and it is given to them. So it is with clothes, furniture and other material requirements."

"The Comptons, whose settlement is now twenty-six years old, are a religious people, believing in peace. One of them said God is not to be found outside in space, but inside in the hearts of humanity and man must work out his own salvation."

"The writer ends with these sentences: 'But whatever their religious beliefs may be, the Comptons have in their comfortable surroundings, their ample leisure for thought and the peace and quiet of the pastoral beauty of Prince Edward Island, all the elements necessary for building up not only the material prosperity which is theirs, but a spiritual legacy with which to amply endow themselves and their descendants.'" has been followed by cities in many countries. As nations or municipalities have taken up this work, the Carnegie fund has been followed by cities in many ways.

Whatever may have been said against the way in which the Carnegie millions were made, the good the owner and the trust have done cannot be questioned.

The Flower

Once in a golden hour
I cast to earth a seed.
Up there came a flower.
The people said, a weed.

To and fro they went Thro' my garden-bower,
And muttering discontent
Cursed me and my flower.

Then it grew an ill
It wore a crown of light,
But thieves from o'er the wall
Stole the seed by night.

So 'd it far and wide
By every town and tower,
Till all the people cried
'Splendid is the flower.'

Read my little fable:
Hast thou any seed,
Most can raise the flowers now
For all have got the seed.

And some are pretty enough
And some are poor indeed,
And now again the people
Call it but a weed.

—Alfred Tennyson.

New Words Every Day

Turkish newspapers are using a "ration" of five new words a day, in an effort to encourage their use in daily speech.

The Sunshine Inn

EVERYONE is glad that Captain Gadsden has been honored with the Good Citizen's Medal. Thousands have been helped by him with food of which they were sorely in need, among them many children. No one will ever know how many fathers left their own breakfasts or dinners for their little boys and girls and forced themselves to go to the inn for their meal. Neither Captain Gadsden, nor the good people that helped him, ask any questions. This good man saw what could be done in a very hard time and went to work quietly but very effectively to do it. He has set an example to all boys and girls to follow. The little Sunshine Inn has been an object lesson to us all. Let us hope that Captain Gadsden will be long spared to help and cheer those in need.

Dreams

Be gentle, O hands of a child:
Be true! Like a shadowy sea
In the starry darkness of night
Are your eyes to me.

But words are shallow, and soon
Dreams fade that the heart once knew;
And youth fades out in the mind.
In the dark eyes too.

What can a tired heart say,
Which the wise of the world have made Dumb?
Save to the lonely dreams of a child,
"Return again. Come!"

—Walter de la Mare

Used Knife as Mirror

EMPEROR Francis Joseph used his table knife, not to cut up food, but as a mirror to adjust his famous whiskers.

This is the story told by Admiral Ludwig von Lochner, a former aide-de-camp of the late Emperor, in an Austrian newspaper in connection with the inauguration of a Francis Joseph Exhibition.

The meat for the Emperor, says the Admiral, had to be served soft enough to be divided by a fork. But the Emperor liked to toy with his knife and to take glances at his reflection in its highly-polished blade to see that his whiskers and hair were in order.

Immunity From Colds

THAT daily doses of vitamins give immunity from flu and the common cold has been proved by tests carried out over a period of two years on groups of workers at a Port Sunlight factory.

Two years ago when an influenza epidemic was raging the experiment of giving daily doses in capsule form of vitamin to about 100 men and women began.

A detailed study was made of their health records and the records of other workers in the same departments. It showed that the group taking the vitamins through the vitamin group totaled 924, as against 1,870 among the others.

League Made Her Bald

THE League of Nations has just had to pay £330 as compensation to one of its women workers who went completely bald while in the League's service.

The woman, a French widow, said that she had to work in a room into which smoke from a chimney was blown. The smoke, she claimed, removed her hair.

She only made the claim for £4,000 after she had lost her job with the League, for which she had worked twelve years as a stenographer.

Patent Sleep Producer

A new invention which will be a boon to intellectual workers, and to those obliged to sleep in noisy areas, has been patented by Antal Zurbik, in the form of an ear-protector which catches and mutes every description of noise.

Look for Work

SOME of the young people who have finished their studies at school have been offered work that may enable them to earn a living in future. We may all be thankful for that. But there are many who have not that opportunity, for one reason or other. These boys and girls should not be content to be idle. In every home there is work for a girl to do. While she was at school the mother did it all and yet she tired she often was. Now she can help care for the little ones, make the beds, sweep the floor, wash the dishes, prepare the vegetables, and do many another easy if not uninteresting task.

The boy can help, too. There are tenets to mow, kneeling to cut, wood to bring up from the beach. If there is a garden or lawn, it must be watered and kept clear of weeds. Perhaps your neighbor needs help. No lad will lose anything by lending a hand. He will gain in strength and skill, not to speak of the gratitude of the one helped or his own satisfaction.

Our young people, as well as their elders, think too much of the money value of work. Let a prize be offered and many or at least some will try for it. If not less it may well remember that the writing will make them more perfect.

Only the boys who play games, and not all of them, do for the fun they get or the skill and strength they gain.

Money is needed too, badly needed, by some of you. There are, if you look around, even in these hard times, jobs you boys can do if you are willing to learn and to work. It may be in the berry fields on jam factories, or carrying in wood. Whatever it is, if done cheerfully and well, it will help to make a man of you.

Many years ago, a lad, who was the eldest son of a poor widow, broke his breast bone while lifting a heavy stone. Two younger brothers had gone to learn a trade. The sisters gave what help they could and the mother worked long hours to keep the home and little farm. An unskilled doctor allowed the wound to fester and for two years the youth was an invalid. Instead of treading and grumbling, he set to work to learn to read and write and cipher. He had only been a few months at a very poor school. A neighbor boy helped him and his father who had a good library, lent him books. The young man rose from his sick bed with a knowledge that enabled him to become a merchant as well as an excellent writer. He overcame a misfortune that would have ruined the life of many a boy.

In these days no boy need be idle. All have the groundwork of an education. The libraries and the Department of Education furnish books and in some cases teachers. If everyone looks for work and makes the most of opportunities afforded him, a step will be taken towards the prosperity we all desire.

A Tribute to the Scouts

A LADY was asked, "What was the best thing on a long cruise?" This was the answer:

"Oh, the Scouts of Sierra Leone," she replied at once. "I don't think I shall ever forget their jolly chocolate-colored faces or the way they looked after us."

"At other places we had been pestered by people who wanted to sell us things or act as guides. At Sierra Leone a party of Scouts met the boat, kept off troublesome people, showed us around, and refused to take a tip. We were two women traveling alone, and my sister was an invalid. You can't imagine how thankful we were for those Scouts."

These black boys of an East African seaport had the true Scout spirit.

Scaring the Crows

SEEN some crows scratching about in one of his fields, a farmer fired a gun to scare them away. Thereupon half the number flew away, but one, thinking the danger was passed, returned. The farmer fired a second shot, and again half the crows in the field flew away, and one returned. On counting them, the farmer was annoyed to find that there were exactly as many crows in the field as there were at first.

How many crows were in the field at first?

What Am I?

My situation is in flowery glades,
Or where the thicket oft extends its shades;
Sometimes upon a rising hill I'm found,
And sometimes I am seen on level ground.
Yet care and art do both combine to place
My wondrous form remote from human race.
To know my name, O boys, just use your brain.
And in the woods and groves let me remain.

A Strange Coin

Change the head of a coin
And its worth is double,
While merely to add one
Would give you some trouble.

A Charade

Than pagans pestilence and fire
My first has evils far more dire;
And in the long historic page
How oft we note its baneful rage!
My next throws many a useful light
On history's page, however bright.
My third a castle high in fame,
Gives to a county worth and name.

A Beautiful Memorial

GRAY'S Elegy is one of the treasures of English literature. It was written nearly two hundred years ago. The poet, we are told, spent a long time in making it perfect. The churchyard of which he wrote has been in danger, but friends have taken care to preserve it. The Penn-Gray Society has bought twenty acres adjoining the church and churchyard of Stoke-Pogis, near which the poet lived and where he worked and thought.

The children's New-paper tells us that their enterprise has had a happy result, for the ground is now a garden of rest, laid out with avenues, a lake, fountains, and a rose garden. As the meadow on the north of the church belongs to the National Trust, the blessed quiet of the surroundings of the world-famous churchyard should remain undisturbed down the centuries.

It is likely that the meadows were old haunts of the poet Gray, who lies in the churchyard. In the new garden there will be no graves, monuments, or tombstones, although in part of it the ashes of the dead may be buried in little memorial gardens. Each of these will have a sundial, a seat, or a garden ornament inscribed with the name of the person commemorated.

We may all be glad that the old church and its surroundings are to be preserved for future generations. But everyone who chooses can make the poem his or her own possession and so have an abiding memorial of the poet. That is what General Wolfe did, and who can tell how often his pain was soothed and his anxiety driven away by the thoughts and music written in that quiet spot?

Those of you who learn Gray's Elegy by heart as a holiday task will never regret the trouble you have taken.

Sunny Summer

Summer's sunny days have come,
Soft and sweet the wind is blowing.
Rees across the meadows hum,
Where the golden flowers are growing.
Fields and trees are green and fair,
Sunshine's sleeping everywhere.

O the sunny Summer days,
When the ripples dance and quiver,
Where the sun at noonday lays Silver beams upon the river!
Come and let us in here—
Warm the water is clear.

See the fishes dart about
Where a thousand lights are dancing.
Here a minnow, there a trout,
Like a flash of silver glancing.
Is it "hide-and-seek" they play
All the sunny Summer day?

Hear how sweet the river sings,
Ever rippling, ever flowing,
Telling of a thousand things
Whence it comes and whither going.
Singing like the birds and bees
Of the wondrous world it sees.

"Come and I shall bathe your feet,
Little boys so warm with playing.
In the Summer's sultry heat—
That is what the water's saving.
Off go jackets, socks and shoes;
How could any boy refuse?"

All the wood is filled with sound,
And the very air is ringing,
Up and down and round and round,
With the songs the birds are singing.
Oh, the happy Summer hours—
All the world's a world of flowers.

Thomas Hardy's Cousin

MR. John Antell has passed away in Puddletown. Very few people have heard of him except in Dorset, but everyone has heard of his cousin, Thomas Hardy. They were the first-born sons of two loving sisters.

John Antell was a charming old character. He had played the violin in the old church choir, just such a choir as Hardy described in Under the Greenwood Tree. By trade he was a shoemaker, but he could make poems as well as shoes. Cousin John Tom published many books. Cousin John published only one, and that was to earn money for the repair of a tombstone. There was something romantic about it, because the tomb was nothing to do with his family.

In 1802 the king of the gypsies was encamped at Puddletown. There he died of smallpox, and was buried at midnight by the light of many candles. In time the lettering on his gravestone grew hard to read, and John Antell did not like to think that a king's tomb should be so neglected. Perhaps John was all the more sympathetic because the old man was only a gypsy king. He loved the woods and the heath and freedom and a merry tune as much as any gypsy could love them.

Now we have lost one who was not a famous man but was an authority on old Dorset life, and was besides a lovable personal who will be sorely missed.—Children's Newspaper.

Books to Read

YOU will all have time to read what you like in the next two months. Joan has been satisfied with the funny pages, however funny they may be.

At the City Library, Miss King has books, good, useful, interesting and amusing for all children who take care of them. When you are tired of romping and playing you can get together and listen to the best reader of the group or steal away to some quiet spot and enjoy the book alone.

In many of your homes there are pretty books given as prizes, birthday or Christmas gifts. Read and lend these.

But there are books not good for children to read. They are like some sweet but poisonous food, and weaken and injure the mind. As a rule they are given or lent to you on the sly. Have nothing to do with them. It is a safe rule for boys and girls to read no book which their parents have not seen.

Treasure Ship Located

A SUNKEN galleon that lay contain treasure worth £9,000,000 has been discovered on the seabed outside Helsingfors.

Divers have identified an old wreck as that of a Russian galleon which was sunk during the Russo-Swedish war of 1721.

Naval records state that it carried a vast amount of loot that the Russians had taken from Sweden—silver and gold plate, jewelry and fourteen barrels of gold coins.

A salvage expedition, guided by a recently-discovered logbook of the early eighteenth century, located the wreck at the very spot recorded in the book.

A London diver, John Davies, went down to the wreck in 1735 and secured some silver. But since then the galleon has been forgotten.

The Carnegie Fund

IT is almost a hundred years since on November 25, 1835, Andrew Carnegie was born in a house of a humble weaver in Dunfermline, Scotland. When he was ten years old, the boy emigrated with his parents to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. In the course of time he made an immense fortune as an ironmaster.

That fortune was at his death placed in the hands of trustees called the Carnegie Foundation. The money has gone on working for good in many ways. Before he died the rich man left money for hospitals in the United States and founded free libraries in Pittsburgh, Alleghany and Edinburgh. He gave public buildings to his native city. His trustees have continued the work he began and have extended it in many directions. In Great Britain and Canada medals and money have been given to those who have saved lives at the risk of their own. The roll of these heroes now amounts to several thousand.

Help to Libraries

IN many cities of Canada, Great Britain and the United States the Carnegie fund has been used to build homes for books to be read by all. More recently it has been used for libraries to be circulated freely through districts by motor cars. Last year you listened to many useful and entertaining lectures provided by the fund.

Money has come from the Carnegie fund to provide pensions for the professors of new and struggling universities, so that these teachers would not want in their old age. Grants have been given to encourage agricultural education in England, Scotland and Wales.

Playing Fields

THE money of the man who spent his youth in the close air of factories has gone to buy playing fields for the young people of this generation. The example thus set

AGRICULTURE IS A FIRST PRINCIPLE: ON IT RESTS THE LIFE AND HAPPINESS OF MANKIND—Julian A. Dimock

Culture of Dahlias for Fine Exhibition Blooms

ONCE growth of dahlias commences in earnest, it is extraordinarily rapid, and constant attention will be necessary from now on until the end of the season. Even the simple task of tying is one on which too much care can hardly be devoted. On no account must it be neglected, for, if the shoots are left to blow about in the wind, damage of some description is almost inevitable. The main point, however, is to see that the initial ties are loose enough to allow for the stems to increase in girth. At the first sign of their becoming too tight and constricting the stem, they must immediately be cut away, for any impediment to the free flow of sap will certainly have an adverse effect on the quality of the blooms.

Dahlias are notorious sun lovers, and so long as they are assured of an ample supply of moisture at the roots, it is hardly possible for the weather to prove too hot for them. If, on the other hand, they have to endure a prolonged dry spell without any assistance in the way of watering and mulching, they will soon show signs of distress.

On Light Soil

ON light soils it is worth while to go to the trouble of laying down a surface mulch, but at this early date it is not advisable to apply anything in the nature of strong manure. Feeding too early is a grave mistake with dahlias, and the plants' resentment to it is soon shown by the foliage wilting during hot sunshine. It will, it is true, revive, but the effects of this on the plants themselves are serious and far-reaching. Actually any loose fluffy material is suitable for mulching. There is nothing better than short lawn clippings, and if a generous supply is available, they should certainly be made use of. The ideal time to apply a mulch is, of course, immediately after heavy rain or a good watering. To lay it down in the midst of a prolonged dry spell when the soil is already parched is in the nature of locking the stable after the horse has gone.

Should the season necessitate watering, despite these precautions, there is one golden rule to bear in mind, that is to water copiously. The roots are far-reaching, and to prove of any real assistance, sufficient must be given in one application to penetrate the soil to the furthest tips. Another method of assisting the plants is by means of overhead sprays, which should be given for preference during the cool of the evening. It is astonishing how much moisture one good-sized plant will pass on to the atmosphere by transpiration through its leaves. By damping the surrounding air, this process is completely checked for at least a little while.

No Need to Divide Bleeding Heart

By DEAN HALLIDAY

NEARLY all perennials should be divided about every third year, but only the late Summer and Autumn flowering things should be divided in the Spring. The early bloomers should be divided and transplanted in the late Summer or Fall.

Exceptions to this general rule are the bleeding heart, perennials and the old-fashioned and delightful gas plant (dictamnus fraxinella). Leave these alone indefinitely, unless they begin to pine. Other things become crowded at their roots and deteriorate, owing to insufficient nourishment.

When dividing, dig the entire plant out of the ground and cut the mass apart, or pull out the younger portions and replant only these. Or dig down at one side of the plant, exposing the roots to their base, cut off half or a portion of the plant top and root, right down through it. Fill up the excavation and plant the cut-off part elsewhere.

If done in this way, the original plant will grow on untroubled, whereas if flowering out of the ground altogether, both it and its subtracted portions will be set back somewhat in the first season.

There is a right and wrong way to cut roses, advises House Beautiful, and by the proper method you not only get longer stems to the flower, but the plant is improved in vigor and habit. Cut the rose early in the morning, while the wood is firm and cool. Cut the stalk to a point within two inches of the branch bearing the flowering shoot. This usually leaves two good eyes which, in a few weeks, will produce more flowers. After cutting, plunge the bloom into cool water and put in the ice box or basement for four or five hours before bringing into the room. These measures will insure a longer life to the cut rose.

A rose cut just as the outside petals start to unfold and placed in a cool place will reach larger size than if left on the plant.

British Columbia Bulbs Attract Attention

IN the Autumn of 1934 the British Columbia Department of Agriculture sent to the Superintendent of Municipal Parks at Shanghai, through Colonel L. M. Cosgrave, Canadian Government Trade Commissioner, a shipment of British Columbia-grown bulbs. The shipment contained different varieties of tulips, narcissi and iris.

A report to Bruce A. MacDonald, Acting Government Trade Commissioner, Shanghai, from W. J. Kerr, Superintendent of Municipal Parks, Shanghai, has been forwarded to Hon. K. C. MacDonald stating that the bulbs flowered exceedingly well and that it is proposed by the Shanghai Municipal Council to place an order through the British Columbia Department of Agriculture for a quantity of narcissi and iris bulbs for planting in the parks this Fall. In Mr. Kerr's report it is mentioned that the bulbs, which were inspected and packed for shipment by E. W. White, District Horticulturist, Victoria, arrived in perfect condition, and that the King Alfred narcissi, which

Keep Laterals Nipped

THE "staked-out" shoots must, of course, be kept free from laterals, with the exception of one or two, which are retained to provide a succession of blooms. As a result, it will not be long before flower buds are formed, and the sooner disbudding commences the better. The buds are usually produced in clusters of three, of which only one should be retained. Preference, as a rule, should be given to the central or crown bud, as this can be cut with a much straighter stem than either of the side members, but it may prove necessary to retain one of the auxiliaries. Preference should always be shown for those with a very tiny hole in the centre, as these invariably produce reliable blooms.

It is at this stage that earwigs are liable to step in, and their ravages have almost to be seen to be believed. Where they are known to be troublesome, it will be well worth while to take preventive measures. Flower pots, stuffed with dry hay, inverted on the stakes, should be used to trap them. Another plan is to tie a piece of cotton wool around the flower stalk. This is a barrier insects will seldom cross.

Timing the Blooms

TIMING the blooms is an art which can only be acquired with experience, but with the large-flowered varieties in particular it is wise to err on the safe side, for their development from the first signs of color, to a fully grown bloom, will often extend over two or three weeks. For a week or so before a show some protection from the weather should also be devised, and for this there is nothing better than the cone shades so frequently used for roses. Makeshifts can be made in several ways, however, and one rough and ready method which proves remarkably effective is to nail a chocolate box to a stout stake above the flower. The tipped and edged varieties are specially improved by this extra attention, as the colors are deepened, and they are amongst the first to exhibit a weather-beaten appearance.

Feeding may commence just as soon as the flower buds form, and, once started, it can be carried on without cessation throughout the season. For a start, weak solutions of liquid manure can take the place of clear water. This, together with a little soft water to improve the color of the blooms, can be a regular diet. Further assistance can be supplied in the form of a good all-round fertilizer. Guano and basic slag are also useful. The former, applied at the rate of two ounces per square yard, just as the buds begin to swell, will be a splendid tonic, while the latter is valuable as a steady influence; should growth become too rapid, a dressing of one ounce to the square yard has a very marked effect.

were placed in boxes and forced, flowered very well and much earlier than bulbs of the same variety imported from Holland.

"The best display was definitely that presented by Iris 'Wedgewood'." The flowers in this instance were easily the best I have seen," states Mr. Kerr. In conclusion, the Parks Superintendent mentions that the shipment was a very successful one, and the numerous inquiries received regarding the country of origin of the bulbs made it necessary to arrange for a special notice to be displayed, informing visitors to the parks that these flowering bulbs had been grown in British Columbia.

Canadian and other Empire wheats are admitted free into the British Isles while most wheat of foreign origin is dutiable under the Ottawa Agreements Act at a rate of two shillings (48 cents) per quarter of 480 pounds.

Why Not Make a Garden Pool?

Even a Small Garden Pool Can Furnish a Whole Summer's Interest

FOR a period of years, many of us have been planning to have a pool in the garden—some day. It is not always necessary to have a large pool, for even a very small one can be interesting and contain aquatic fish and plants.

The first decision to be made is where the pool is to be placed. Often we place the pool under a large tree, or build an oval pool between the large roots of trees. While this idea of a pool is attractive, if we desire to have water lilies or water hyacinths in the pool, it must be in a position where the sun can get to it. Water lilies will grow in a pool in the shade, but they will give very few blooms.

Thinning Heavy Apple Crop

The variety Yellow Transparent, in common with many other varieties, is subject to biennial bearing. Yield records for the past eight years have shown that this tree, like many others, has borne one-half to one box of fruit on the "off" years, and approximately six to ten boxes on the "on" years.

The Garden Week by Week

By NORMAN W. F. RANT, F.R.H.S.

WE often hear the remark that there is never enough bloom in the rock garden during the Summer. We find that this remark is far from true, as is proven by checking up all the alpine or rock plants that are blooming at this time or are just about to do so.

Taking the plants alphabetically, the first to appear to us is Acantholimon, or the prickly thistle. A. glaucum is an excellent plant of spiky green foliage almost hidden by its pink flowers. Easy to grow in good open soil at the foot of rocks. A. venustum is even more beautiful, but, owing to the difficulty of propagating, the price is too high to suit most of us.

Gardeners do not appreciate the alliums, or onions. There are three which are native to this Island, the first two with pink flowers. Allium cernuum is only an inch or so high; A. crenulatum is about six inches, and so is A. acutolimum, which is purple. A. molle is a bright yellow of about six inches.

All the alliums can be tucked in below any creeping or matting plants to grow up through them. Of course, A. cernuum is too dwarf to grow through anything except the small creeping plants such as Veronica repens, Arenaria balearica, either of the Acaenas or Hutchinsonia alpina.

One of the Alyssums is a late bloomer, A. rostratum. All the Androsaces are over with the exception of A. foliosa. This is a leafy Androsacea, with heads of pink flowers on two to four-inch stems. Both the Antennarias are in bloom, and they are both native to the West, being very high alpine plants with dainty woolly green foliage. A. rosea has pink cat's-paw-like flowers, and A. media is white.

A Fine Native

WHILE on the latter A, we should not overlook both our Arctostaphylos or Kumkinnick, called bearberry by the Indians. These are both very handsome evergreen trailing plants with red berries later on. Arenaria montana is still in bloom, as is the tiny creeping A. balearica. A. montana is a prolific bloomer, most useful to fill up the crevices of rocks with lovely pure white flowers.

A. balearica covers rocks as easily as soil. It grows both up and down, loves shade and has tiny white stemless flowers. Most of the alpine asters are still in full bloom, and more are coming. There is not a very great deal of difference in them, European and native. Likewise we may as well mention their sisters, the Erigerons, the only difference being the two rows of petals in one and the single row in the other.

Columbines can still provide us with splendid bloom. A. pyrenaica is only just opened and is a most charming flower of true blue, only six inches high, and does much better in shade. A. alpina is its prototype, only taller, and is also providing some late flowers. A new addition to this large family is a tiny columbine only three inches high, foliage almost prostrate and flowers pale blue and white, now in bloom.

Hellium minus and B. rotundifolia, the wee alpine daisies, are blooming in all their glory. Calamintha alpina, a six-inch plant, literally covered with violet-colored flowers, is just opening.

A Campanula Family

OF all the most beloved of the alpinists, our next family is very, very hard to equal in profusion of flowers, adaptability to any and all situations, and habit of growth. We allude to the campanulas. There is a four-foot by five-foot wall in Victoria planted with these plants, about five different varieties in all the blue shades. There is no more beautiful sight than this same wall. If any of our readers are interested enough to wish to see it, please advise the writer, when permission will be obtained for you to visit the garden.

There are just two dozen varieties we can think of that are either blooming or are about to do so. It would take columns to name and describe them even very meagrely. Campanulas are in bloom from the beginning of June to August or September. No rocky or rock wall should be without them. There are practically only two colors among the campanulas, blue or white, the latter only about 2 to 3 per cent. We have seen the latest importation, which is C. poscharkayana (not to be confused with C. poschkeana), and this plant, seen pushed at the foot of a large rock, stems laden with wide open blue star-shaped flowers at least eighteen inches. Two others of the same habit, C. elatines and C. garganica, or at least a form of these, are magnificent plants and cover themselves in bloom.

Besides these wall varieties we have the carpeting or spreading varieties. What can be more effective than the dainty little white or blue bells of C. pusilla forming drifts up some semi-shady nook of a foot or so in width, or C. bellardi with its grey or blue bells on two to three-inch stems; then again the wee violet bells of C. excisa, with the little pieces at the base of each lobe missing as if some insect had taken a bite out of each?

The quickest carpeter is undoubtedly C. C. G. Wilson, of two to four-inch stems, carrying huge dark violet cup-shaped flowers.

Again, there are those that form dainty clumps, so to speak, such as C. stansieana, C. tonsianiana and C. waldsteiniana, the leafy and dwarf form of C. glomerata called C. glomerata acutula.

We shall have to close this article before we can even finish the letter C, but not without mentioning those two lovely trailers, the large white form of C. isophylla and C. isophylla, which will suspend themselves a foot or more.

Bird and Cattle Pests

MOST species of birds and animals are subject to infestation by small insect parasites known as biting lice. These parasites are related to the sucking lice, which were so troublesome to soldiers in the World War. The biting lice pass their whole lives on the bodies of birds and animals and soon die if removed from their hosts. There are more than 2,000 known species in the world, the majority occurring on birds. Some of these species infest domestic poultry and, when numerous, cause loss of weight and decrease in egg production; others are a pest on cattle and horses.

A survey to determine the number of species of these lice on wild and domestic birds and animals in Canada is being carried out under the direction of the Dominion Entomologist. Ornithologists, taxidermists, game wardens, naturalists and others whose activities bring them in close contact with wild life, are co-operating by collecting lice and sending them to Ottawa where they are mounted on slides and examined and classified under the microscope.

The Biennial Bearing Habit of Fruit Trees

By J. L. WEBSTER

(Dominion Experimental Station, Saskatoon)

IN many of our commercial varieties of fruit trees the habit of biennial or alternate cropping is responsible for considerable loss to growers due to the reduction in total crop over a period of years. Trees which have the biennial habit usually bear an exceedingly heavy crop one year, followed by an extremely light crop the next year. This habit is persistent in many important varieties of apples, pears and plums. Apples are by far the worst offenders, but a few varieties of plums and pears are also inclined to have their "on" and "off" years. Cherries and peaches usually bloom and bear fairly regularly, providing disease, etc., is controlled and good vigor is maintained.

The most desirable type of bearing is that of a moderate or average crop each year. The fruit will be of good size and quality, and the trees will be less subject to breakage. On trees afflicted with the biennial habit, the fruit will be very clustered and small on the "off" year unless heavily thinned, and may be over-sized and poor in quality on the "on" year. Over a period of years the moderate annual bearer has been shown to out-yield the biennial bearer by approximately one-third.

Some Inherent Biennials

IN apples there are many varieties which are classed as inherent biennial bearers. This is because under average methods of culture this habit usually cannot be broken. Examples of a long list of such varieties are Gravenstein, Yellow Newtown, Yellow Transparent, Wealthy, etc. Examples of varieties which tend to produce crops more regularly under favorable conditions are Delicious, King, Winesap, McIntosh, etc. In pears the Howell is very biennial, with Clairgeau and Seckel to a lesser extent. Of the plums which are noted, Black Diamond, Sugar Prune and a number of others tend to be quite alternate in bearing habit.

Whether a tree bears or not is, of course, first dependent upon development of fruit buds. In order to produce a crop next year, say, fruit buds must be formed during the month of June and July of this year. These buds remain latent during Fall and Winter, and bloom next Spring. In order, then, that a tree produce good crops of fruit in consecutive years it must, of course, form fruit buds at the same time as it is sizing a crop. This some trees seem unable to do. Also some trees will bloom and set fruit on practically every fruit spur on their "on" year.

English Ivy Is Excellent Covering for Walls

ENGLISH ivy, or Hedera helix, is and always will be a great favorite. It is easy to grow and is hardy. To many people it has a sentimental appeal.

It clings closely and is excellent for covering walls. It is attractive trailing over stone walls, climbing up brick chimneys or buildings. It is lovely as a border for hedges, and is equally effective creeping over the ground as a ground-cover.

No matter how it is used, it is attractive. Often it is seen edging formal pools. Another use is to have it clambering up the sundial or bird bath. Many people use it in hanging baskets, porch and window boxes.

This ivy does best in partially shaded places. It will grow in almost any soil, but prefers a rich, moist ground. The fact that it is an evergreen plant makes it doubly useful, and often saves a situation which might otherwise be quite unattractive.

When growing this ivy indoors, one must provide plenty of moisture, although it should not be allowed to stand in water. It is advisable to wash the leaves often, to keep the pores open, as dust and soot prevent the plants from breathing freely.

Ivy propagates readily by layering and cuttings and also by rooted parts.

Take Time Now to Plan for New Perennials

AS most of this year's annuals and perennials are planted and thriving, it is time to take "time out" to decide which perennials and biennials we want for next year. The seeds should be secured now and the cold frames prepared.

The soil in the cold frame should be friable, that is, soil that will not cake on top, for it is difficult for the young seedlings to force their way up through hard soil. An ideal soil consists of good loam, sand and peat moss. It always is worth while to screen the upper layer of soil into which the seeds are placed, and also the soil which you use to cover over the seeds. It is important to sterilize the soil before planting the seeds. This eliminates grief later. Commercial formaldehyde is very effective and is quite easy to use.

When seeding, always obtain fresh seeds. Although some seeds have enough vitality to last a year or more, one is often disappointed in having better success with new ones. This is particularly true of delphinium seeds. The more times seedlings are transplanted, the better the root growth will be, for seedlings having just one transplanting are apt to grow too tall and spindly. It is safest to winter over the biennials in the cold frame, but the perennials could be placed in their permanent location in the Fall.

Canadian exports of canned fruit to Great Britain were 28 per cent greater from January 1 to March 16, 1935, than during the corresponding period of 1934. The principal increases were in canned apples, pears and peaches.

The total shipments of certified potato seed from Canada in 1934 amounted to 1,128,745 bushels, 728,582 bushels being shipped during the months of January to May inclusive, and 400,163 bushels from the Fall to December.

This means that there are few, if any, growth points for the formation of fruit buds that year, and it is impossible for such trees to be annual. On the ideal tree there is good vigor and new growth and two groups of fruit spurs. One group of fruit spurs will be differentiating fruit buds while the other matures fruit.

Depends on Tree Vigor

TO explain the reason why sometimes fruit buds are formed and sometimes leaf buds are formed, or to explain something about fruit bud differentiation would require a lengthy discussion on plant physiology. It will suffice to say that the relation of the stored foods in the tree to the year in the tree largely controls and determines fruit bud formation.

The most recent experiments which have been conducted have been done with a view to changing the habit of the inherent biennial bearers. Some of these will be briefly commented upon.

Blossom spraying with various materials has been attempted in order to destroy a percentage of the bloom on the heavy crop year. If successful, the theory was that fruit bud formation would be induced that year which would give a crop the following year. So far no spray material has been discovered which would destroy a percentage of the blossoms without seriously burning the young leaves which appear at that time.

Blossom thinning or the removal of a number of blossoms has been successful in inducing fruit bud formation during the heavy crop year, but the cost has been prohibitive.

A new method of ringing of trees in the heavy crop year has been shown to induce considerable fruit bud formation. It is not generally recommended owing to the danger of seriously injuring the tree.

Most Effective Method

THE most effective methods yet recommended for general orchard practice are moderate to severe pruning in the Winter before the "off" year and heavy nitrogen fertilization in the Spring of the "off" year. The practice need not be general throughout the orchard, but should be confined to those trees which are noted as being biennial.

Careful attention given to all orchard operations, particularly the thinning of heavy crop trees and the maintenance of fertility and moisture supply, will go a long way toward preventing the tendency to biennial bearing.

Methods of Identifying and Controlling Early Blight of Potatoes

EARLY blight occurs in Quebec, Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia, and is particularly troublesome in the Maritime Provinces, where it occasionally heavy losses practically every year. It is quite destructive in certain seasons, especially to such early-maturing varieties as Irish Cobbler and Bliss-Triumph. Later-maturing varieties suffer also, and when they are attacked late in the growing season the resulting losses may be very heavy.

This disease attacks the leaves and stalks of potato plants, and is called early blight because it usually appears comparatively early in the growing season. The disease is recognized on the foliage as dark brown to black roundish or oval spots irregularly distributed over the leaf surface and marked by the characteristic target-like rings or ridges. The last-named feature readily identifies this particular disease and distinguishes it from late blight as well as from all other leaf disorders of the potato. Because of the weaker condition of the lower leaves they are most liable to infection, which is further aided by such injuries as those inflicted by soil, flea beetles and other insects.

Attacks Tubers Also

CONTRARY to the belief held for many years, early blight may attack potato tubers. They are contaminated by the spores during digging operations, and typical spots may be seen at any time, but the greatest development occurs in storage. Infected areas are shallow, purplish-brown, circular, with a tendency towards irregularity, varying in diameter from one-quarter to one inch and surrounded by an even raised border. These lesions might be confused with late blight rot, but closer observations show them to be shallow and isolated from the healthy tissues by a tough corky layer, a symptom never associated with late blight infections, which spread unevenly into affected tubers.

The importance of this disease has made it necessary for the Division of Botany, Dominion Experimental Farms, to conduct tests for the purpose of establishing the necessary control measures, which are as follows:

Spray With Bordeaux

SPRAY with Bordeaux mixture (4-4-40). Applications must be made regularly and thoroughly every ten days or two weeks, starting when the plants are six to eight inches high. Bordeaux destroys the fungus, strengthens the plant and reduces flea beetle injury, which is an aid to infection.

After the potatoes have been dug, rake up and burn the tops, as they offer winter protection to the fungus responsible for early blight. Combine this measure with a rotation of crops as a means of ridding the soil of the fungus. Successful crops of potatoes on the same land tend to increase the disease, and usually it is worse each year if there is no rotation of crops.

Avoid piling the potato tops close to the newly dug pile of potatoes, thus disposing of one of the important sources of tuber infection.

Canadian ice cream-by-law must contain not less than ten per cent of milk fat and no other kind of fat must be employed in its manufacture.

CANADA'S FIRST RAILWAY LINE

By Col. T. B. Monk

ON a cloudless Monday morning in the month of May, a gay and fashionably dressed group of Montreal citizens awaited the departure of the train de luxe of the Champlain & St. Lawrence Railway from the station located at the village of La Prairie, Lower Canada, the raison d'être of this assembly were three travelers from the upper reaches of the Ottawa River, who had been visiting relatives and friends while on their way through Montreal to the Old Country, via New York. This route was made possible by the completion of the Montreal railway line.

About one hundred years later appears an item in The Daily Colonist, of Victoria, B.C., dated June 8, 1935, Page 5, stating that the construction of the above railway line was commenced in June, 1835; that it was the first railway to operate in Canada and the first link of the present Canadian National-Railway system, comprising some 14,000 miles of railway line and operating passenger steamers from Halifax to Bermuda on the Atlantic and from Alaska to the Annapolis on the Pacific, with the western terminal of the railway line situated at Victoria, B.C. The site of this city, at the time of the completion of Canada's first railway line, was only known to the Indian, the explorer and the fur trader.

Among the group gathered at La Prairie stood the prothonotary of the city of Montreal, the grandfather of the Minister of Public Works in the Borden Cabinet, who inaugurated the construction of the line, at that time, largest drydock in the world at Esquimaux, B.C., and at Victoria the present Outer Wharves (see Daily Colonist, January 15, 1914), and with the prothonotary stood his young niece of nineteen, from the pages of whose diary we are to read a description of the most modern method of travel of a century ago.

The Canadians at this time in their history were clashed in the throes of the McKenney-Papineau Rebellion. The whole countryside about La Prairie had been laid waste by fire and sword, by loyal troops, by rebel, and by marauder bands who murdered first and pillaged afterwards.

Speed in That Day

OUR infant railway seems, however, to have escaped the activities of these enthusiasts for King, country and self, and was daily carrying traffic over its line of sixteen miles from La Prairie to St. John's on the Richelieu River at a maximum speed of eighteen miles per hour, having reduced the time of travel between these two terminals from one day by team, particularly in Spring and Fall, when the country roads were nearly impassable, to one hour by rail, considered at that time a remarkable achievement. Difficulties, however, were experienced with the snow in the Winter and it was proposed, but not carried out, to raise the railway tracks above the snowfall level.

The rails were wooden beams with strap iron spiked to the top, which formed the surface for the truck wheels.

The engine, which tooted along under the famous name of "Dorchester," consisted of a boiler on a four-wheeled truck, and at the rear end of the truck the engineer stood, exposed to wind and weather. However, a shield was supplied to protect him from sparks from the funnel-shaped smokestack; two levers were conveniently placed for him, one for the brakes, the other to operate the steam. Chained to the engine truck with about two feet of chain followed the wood truck, from which the engineer procured the cordwood for the fire as he required it. The water for the boiler was carried in a large, tub or cistern on a second truck and when water was required the engineer dipped the water out by the pailful and poured it into the boiler through another funnel-shaped arrangement in rear of the smokestack.

"Passenger" Coaches

The passenger coaches consisted of three compartments after the fashion of the present Old Country railway coaches, viz., passengers entering from the side of the coach. On the foretop of each coach a brakeman was mounted on a seat similar to a coachman's seat, from where he operated the brakes. This operation required considerable skill and attention to signals from the engineer, owing to the flexibility of the chain couplings, to prevent too much bumping in starting and stopping, and as the coach was mounted on a carriage-like spring, a certain amount of bouncing was experienced by the passengers under the best of circumstances.

The passengers' baggage was carried on the top of the coaches in a railed-off enclosure in a similar manner as one sees today on the motor busses.

The diary opens:

Monday, May 17—
Leaving the shores of Canada, shall not say how happy and yet how sorrowful I was made by letters my cousin George handed me just as I was leaving Montreal.

We were a very large and very pleasant party and I enjoyed the first specimen I have had of railroad traveling exceedingly. We traveled in that way from La Prairie to St. John's at the rate of eighteen miles an hour.

Made the acquaintance of a very agreeable young gentleman, a brother officer of my brothers, who intends accompanying the latter in search of adventures all over the world next year. Similarity of circumstances, congeniality of temperament and taste has produced a strong and I hope lasting friendship. Ties, too, of a more peculiar, softer, more sentimental and tender nature unite them and causes the deepest sympathy, but this subject must not be enlarged upon.

tion is too great to allow of my writing more. Parted on board the Burlington with my dear brother and sister, Georgiana and Benjamin. The poor little thing was overwhelmed with grief and felt more than I am sure that he wished to express, and so I did.

Scenery on Lake Champlain very flat, tame and uninteresting until you approach Burlington Heights. Then on to White Hall is very pretty. Steamboat splendidly fitted up, handsome grand square piano on board, cut glass lamps ornamented with wreaths of flowers. Splendid supper. The waiters, as we should term them in our land of tyranny and oppression, or the auxiliaries as they are styled in this anti-subjection country, were all remarkably handsome young men dressed in white jackets, aprons and gauze turbans, bows and streamers of plaid ribbon, etc. In the evening it blew a hurricane. Sea-sickness threatening, took refuge in our berths.

Tuesday, May 18—

White Hall, breakfast Yankee dispatch, cannot be exaggerated, don't know but what 'tis to be admired—they treat eating as a necessity of our nature and attend to it as a necessity. We, on the contrary, enjoy it—prolong it—luxuriate in it.

Blessed with fine weather, it is a peculiar blessing today, for we are confined to a small canal boat, where to be in the cabin is to be stewed alive, to be suffocated; to be on deck is to live and enjoy, to snuff up the fresh air and to admire the beauty of the scenery. We are gliding along gently by the aid of three horses in a string at the rate of about five miles an hour perhaps.

We are passing through a pretty country, the view not extensive, bounded by hills on either side, which sometimes slope away in gentle activities. Sometimes approach the very edge of the canal and terminate in high and precipitous rocks.

Our principle diversion when on deck is in prostrating ourselves under the bridges, which occur constantly, sometimes three within view at a time. Very there is an end to the longest day and time must terminate all human evils. Accordingly, the 18th of May did at last draw to a close, and the unfortunate passengers of the packet Red-lord Northern Canal were at last landed at Mechanic's Ville.

Journey by Train

SIX o'clock did at last arrive and with it the railroad cars! Oh! how I love railroad traveling! Weary to death as I was when I disembarked from the canal boat, moving so rapidly over the face of the country quite exhilarated me. Lost all recollection of the machinery. Fancied myself drawn along by a pair of prancing, bounding steeds, such as one has attached to the Car of Antora.

In our long tedious voyage we passed through many scenes of the revolutionary war, but I cannot dwell with pleasure upon anything connected in the most remote degree with that odious canal boat. I should be tempted to enlarge upon this subject, the scene of the horrid massacre at Fort Edward in the time of Mohr and Montcalm, described so fearfully by Cooper in "The Last of the Mohicans." The surrender of the army of Burgoyne, the taking of Cornwallis, etc., etc.

Crossed the Mohawk twice before entering Troy and the Hudson, once by a very long covered bridge; were well received by the Trojans in Troy House. In the evening we walked about, to view their city and expressed ourselves well pleased; handsome, built; rows of trees, planted at each side of their best streets, have a good effect; delightful sleep in a "down" bed.

Aboard the Albany

WEDNESDAY, May 19—Am now surrounded with snoring babies in the ladies' cabin on board the Albany. My situation so unpleasant and the scenery from the deck so inviting that I shall write no more.

There is a library on board containing a dictionary of the American language. One word we lighted on was a very novel one, "catawampus-chawed-up," seems to answer to our expression, "thunder, house, fool and dragons," and means that the person's affairs are irretrievably ruined.

Very much delighted by the scenery, West Point, Kosciuszko's Monument, Military College, perpendicular hills, etc., many scenes of historic interest and one little hallowed spot of literary interest, viz., Washington Irving's cottage, a retired old-fashioned looking place, immediately on the banks of the Hudson, he grows a quantity of grapes.

One thing that excited our surprise was an aqueduct of forty-five miles long to carry water to New York. Why the most enlightened nation should resort to this antiquated means of supplying a town with water surprised us.

Thursday, May 20—

Slept last night in the finest inn in the finest city in the world. New York, a well built and very extensive city, magnificent shops, fine public buildings; pleasant walk on the Battery.

American Independence

AM disappointed in not having seen more of the impudence and independence of the Yankees, not to hear them assert their equality at every step; on the contrary, I have met with nothing but civility and attention; when I have asked a waiter to carry my carpet bag, I have never been told that I might do it myself, as other more fortunate travelers.

I think you meet with more general information and intelligence in the Americans than in any other people. You never find beings hearing the human form so entirely sunk in depravity as in other countries. They have not as yet produced many great luminaries, but for general diffusion of knowledge I should yield the palm to the Americans.

And so our journey of a century ago ends, having required the latter part of three days under very trying conditions for the fair sex at least, but which is accomplished today in some ten hours.

ENGLAND---LOYAL AND DEVOTED

By B. H. H.

WHEN a twenty-mile radius of Victoria Street—one of London's busiest "hubs"—is a spot redeemed forever from the intrusions of the boulder, the tripper and the traffic, because some thirty years ago one man had a vision of what these things might be in the future—do to England if not arrested by a timely restraint, so this peace-loving, unassuming, and very large area of land in the beautiful County of Surrey, and ordained that it should remain beautiful. To this end he made many restrictions and conditions, and relying only upon the natural charm of the surroundings, barred out all disfigurements of advertising, or commercial "art," or raucous traffic.

The result is that today this district lies in a lovely area of quiet lanes, established homes, tended gardens, and a wealth of verdure, sheltered by forest trees and screened, though not concealed, by flowering hedges. Here the birds sing from dawn till twilight, happy families lead delightful days, and, though "father" catches the morning train on "the business of life," he can ever return for his leisure and refreshment to this haven of peace.

The Silver Jubilee

IT was here that I set myself to collect impressions of the Silver Jubilee as can only be gathered in quietness, or discerned, by that inner sense which is the spirit's accompaniment on great and moving occasions. It is the week before "The Day." The weather is still uncertain, the atmosphere tense with preparation, all hearts listening, and waiting experiences on tip-toe, and thrilling rumors abroad. Yet an harmonious and deliberate are the activities that there is—no hectic excitement or murmur of dispute—just some pouring into London on a flood-tide.

Dreaming over the significance of this climax, it seemed as though throughout the months immediately preceding it there had been many notes struck to swell this concerted melody—there is a strange sense that the air is full of music. For the enduring influence of the King and Queen prevail everywhere. They seem to walk with their people in the common ways of life equally as when leading its pageantry. This is their secret, and it is born, not of practice, or of art, but from the garnered acres of the truly Royal hearts! I remember how natural it had seemed to find them kneeling, as part of the great congregation, at the inaugural service of the "Cathedral Pilgrimage" last year in Westminster Abbey.

It was Sunday, and June. Outside the Abbey the sunlight flickered through the young green, the pigeons cooed and preened in the cloisters, and the hush of moments which tell that toil sleeps was over all. Inside, a vast assembly had quietly gathered till every space was occupied; and only a gentle rustle told that the King and Queen had entered. They came, leading the little Princess Elizabeth between them, and escorted by the Westminster scholars, with serious young faces, in their scarlet excocks and beruffled necks, proud and happy at their privilege.

Fellowship of Faith

IT was a moving moment, every face was exalted. All knew that the Christian man and woman had laid aside earthly consequence and had become one with them in the great fellowship of their faith—subjects together of the King Invisible. Then followed the Pilgrim's Hymn (written by John Bunyan centuries ago and still the noblest expression of the pilgrim soul), a glorious service of anthem and prayer. Afterwards, speaking to some American visitors who had found themselves by chance at the Abbey that morning, one of them exclaimed, "Thus has been a deep experience—for beauty, reverence and dignity unequalled—I shall never forget."

Then there was opened the picturesque historical object lesson, the "Pageant of Parliament," given throughout three weeks at the Royal Albert Hall. By it was shown both the uses and abuses incident to forms of government in the making and the significance of those struggles which have taken place periodically and throughout the centuries between king and people until they "got comfortable" together. It was also shown how the firm but withal pliant system of constitutional government which we enjoy had been evolved through sacrifice, readjustment, and not a little conflict, until it suited the temper of the British people and established the basis of the firm friendship with the throne; and so the great pictured story drew on to the happiest climax when the dream of the true Socialist will come true, and it will appear that none need forego rank, right or privilege that they have honestly come by and can faithfully maintain; that class distinction will merge into a great family relationship—all pledged to each by a sincere recognition and respect—and making their several contributions to the mutual content. This was shown by a gallant procession led by the great nobles in their traditional state and followed on by representatives of all the brain-power and soul of the nation—the church, the state, the law, the professions, the skilled workman, the laborer, the student, the dreamer, the worker—each in his several state and brought up by a happy, tumbling crowd of youth, pledging the reinforcements of the future, boys and girls, healthy and eager, equipped and prepared to make their contribution to the ever-widening horizon of national adventure and life.

A Royal Wedding

THEN there was the Royal wedding with its happy auguries, an event which had all the glamour of a fairy tale. So intimate in sentiment, simplicity and reference that every heart could share the present joy and every member of the attendant crowd became at once a wedding guest! How are such miracles accomplished? Not by arrangement, or excitement, or emotion. No. But by a sincerity in relationship which at once produces an exquisite trust and endures all social differences, forms and conventions with a uniting and loving spirit. It was on this occasion that could be felt a quiver of that deep devotion which was to break all bounds at the forthcoming Royal Jubilee. There were tokens, messages from overseas and remote places, all desirous of becoming partners in the great rejoicing. Quiet gracious acts of the King and Queen showing their insight, tact and sympathy into all conditions and needs, and an intense anxiety that none should be overlooked or forgotten. It is not difficult to tabulate all the objects of the Royal solicitude, it would be difficult to discover one cause that they have forgotten! But it was the heir to the throne who showed us what to do as the highest expression of our gratitude and love. In never-to-be-forgotten words, the Prince of Wales spoke for youth and set forth its first claim. He asked that the Empire's gift to the King should take the form of a fund to be administered for the welfare of youth. "There is no sadder sight in the world," he said, "than aimless and dissipated youth. All they need is discipline, friends, and opportunity."

Prince Who Cares

IT is true indeed that the most inspired ideas need only the simplest expression and these words will live always, a noble reminder of the Prince who really cared! Then there comes the gift of the "King's House." A lovely thought, for it is a house set as an example of all that a home should be, neither insignificant nor overbearing, but "of a rightness," having all those improvements which render life a pleasure, but proportioned, but without extravagance; the model of those limits men should set themselves when making provision for family and posterity; not too much to enjoy, nor too little to suffice, without ostentation, but with perfection of beauty and use. None understand better than Her Majesty this sense of "rightness," or what to attain and what to retain in the social structure and in modes, manners and habits, and it is whispered that in every detail of this "house" the advice and sanction of the Queen was sought, and most thoughtfully given; it will remain in the gift of the King, for the use of such persons as he shall desire to honor after having rendered years of loyal devotion in the service of King and Empire. These are only a few of the thoughts and echoes with which we approached the great event, but they all sound the prevailing note—that it is the great consolidating fact in a true union between King and people, and our beloved King and Queen may well exclaim, in the words of a great sovereign of centuries long past: "I count it my greatest glory to have reigned with your loves."

Are No Little Hitlers

No little Germans are going to grow up in the future with Christian names like Hitler, or Hindenburg, or Mackensen.

To stop this form of hero-worship the German Ministry of the Interior has issued a set of rules pointing out that any attempt to christen children by such names will be disallowed.

Instead every effort will be made to foster the use of German names, such as Heinrich, Friedrich and Wilhelm, as well as the use of old Teutonic names such as Horst, Otmar, Balduf and Gunther.

LONDON—The King has conferred the title of "Right Honorable" on the chairman of the London County Council.

Reminiscences

By ANDY McNEAR

"And one man in his time plays many parts."

THESE folk in his time plays many parts. I do not mean some of my experiences. "For the Lord's sake, Andy, put it in good English, and no in bad Scotch, so that folk can understand what you write!"

"Captain Starnum," says I, "I can him, 'if you'll cum blang an' see me a han', I'll try tae pit my guid Scotch intil bad English, an' he daunt tae see!'"

"I'll shup up now and then ye'll ken—know—that the Captain hasna bon arison."

Where to commence? Most folk writing their memoirs (true word, that) start at the wee stage. No, me, I'm just gonn' tae dauner clang."

Church or stage—I'll give the kirk as a send off. No, I'm no gonn' to say I was a pastor or preacher, but I've been in a church or two in my time, and though I ain't think it. I mind the yin at Roseweath. They've vanished up the pews and walks in the off season and our pews looked like clean and—wasn't sticky. Being "Toon folk" and probably guid—good for a sumpence if the place, we were permitted tae have a fashion for the seat. But we couldn't worship the lard if comfort at all, for if you lean back an' clout you een for a meenite, your hair got stuck tae the wall, and if you put your elbows down on that shelf whilst you said a prayer, your hair had tae make it a lang prayer afore you got awa—No, there wasna muckle comfort, your mump, kett-know—in those days the pews were just one lung seat and a long shelf tae hind the books.

Our pew was awa the wall. No, my father was of an inventive turn, and he fetched down from the roof the next Sabbath, rolls of a thickish black paper. We cut the rolls up tae the width of the shelf, and other rolls bigger for our backs, and smuggled them into that kirk hid up."

We were tae put a roll on the shelf, and untill it quietly along tae the next person, and as on tae the end of the shelf. It workit fine, and nuchly bent till we a' stood up and lifted our books tae sing a hymn tae the Lord, then awa, wint the paper and rolled itself up.

Father looked awa' stern and mither was kind of red. Uncle Henry, and our two English guests had caught the hay fever. When we sat down, the paper on the wall dropped off, it was awful trouble some to fix up again without being noticed. You'd get one side stuck an' lean your head agin it, when flickt theither side would cum round in your face.

We'd done a kind of shuffle, and Uncle Henry was at one end of the pew, and Father at theither, for that next prayer, and the paper rolled along between them. Uncle Henry doina muckle of a prayer, for he feintest first, and swish! went the paper. No, I didna remember whit the sermon was about!

He dreaded the tongue-lashing from his wife that invariably accompanied his return home in the early morning hours. So, after a night of tipping, he returned home, went to the kitchen, tied a rope about his waist, and tied skulls, pots and pans to the rope in such a manner that they dragged behind him as he walked. Then he took off his shoes and stole softly upstairs.

"She'll never hear me in this internal din," he whispered to himself as he crept toward the bedroom.

This is done by analogy. One might set fire to a forest to develop enough heat to boil a kettle, or one might do it with a mere handful of twigs. Then, by analogy, one may cause the animal organism to burn up 100 pounds of fats to get fifteen pounds of protein, or one may feed twenty pounds of fish meal.

Oats, being carbonaceous, are fuel feeds. Fish meal provides body substance and energy. These must be uniformly balanced, and in order to obtain that uniform balance protein must be of known value. Fish meal ordinarily bears the list of protein concentrates in animal nutrition, but just as the protein content of fish meal may vary from fifty to seventy-five per cent, so will the quality of this protein vary even more widely. Ten years ago, or even less, protein was considered to be of equal value to protein from any other source. Such is not the case, however, as proteins are recognized to be as widely different in nutritive quality as their sources are different.

Good fish meal can, of course, only result from good raw materials. The raw material should, therefore, be clean and fresh if it is to be used for stock feeding. The biggest differences in prevailing processes are in the drying methods. The one most commonly used on the West Coast is that in which the meal is subjected to direct flame in a rotary device. The nature of the products formed in the fish meal during the heating process is not known. Authorities agree on that. It is, however, not unlikely that the formation of free fatty acids have played a large part. It seemed more likely, say the authorities, that there would be a formation of carboxylic acids from the unsaturated hydrocarbons of the fish oils by the action of heat and oxygen. So far as percentage of protein is concerned, frame drying is detrimental, and as fish meal is sold on a protein basis, the loss of protein is of major importance.

Until the introduction of the Butterfield process plants were compelled to confine their activities to a limited number of varieties of raw materials; which made the production not only costly, but failed to give the variety of meal required in the livestock industry.

Plant Capacity

THE advantage of a plant being able to use many kinds of fish shall, then, have available for recommendation to animal nutritionists several types of fish meal, high in protein and low in mineral content, from predatory fish such as the dogfish; lower protein content but higher mineral content from the waste products of salmon canning and, of course, the well-balanced protein and mineral content of pithard and herring meal. With such an array of fish, farmers should be able to bring about a better balanced animal nutrition, as they would then have products, suitable for supplementing feeds and forage, of widely different nutritive values.

The Butterfield process is designed, in the main, to meet with favor of agriculturists and farmers, because of its palatability; minimum oil content (less than one per cent), and the complete retention of soluble proteins. By employing temperatures of less than 212 degrees Fahrenheit in value, where oxygen is eliminated, thereby assuring conservation of all the vital elements in the raw material and the prevention of any undesirable chemical change in the nature of either meal or oil.

That deals with the technical side of the industry. What are the prospects? They are best set out in the company's prospectus. The capitalization of the new company is $150,000. The company has entered into an agreement for a lease with Albion Fisheries Limited of the company's plant at Ucluelet, on the West Coast, for a period of one year. It is proposed to install the new equipment and to operate the plant, which has an ample supply of raw material and water power. When this plant is on a paying basis, other reduction plans designed to do so may use the new process on payment of royalties to the company, to which the Canadian rights have been transferred by the inventor.

Officers of the new company are: W. N. Butterfield, president; directors, J. L. Gilmore, N. W. Whitaker, M. P. L. Hugh Allen, and R. B. Bennett, all of Victoria, and Volney C. Irons, of Vancouver. The company was incorporated on May 1 this year, and authorized to commence business June 7, 1935.

Earth Current Studied

A MINUTE electric current flowing through the earth's crust is being studied by the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

Long a subject of speculation, this earth current has been found by Dr. W. J. Rooney, physicist, to show striking relationships to changes in the earth's magnetic field. It was found that at Tucson, Ariz., the earth current flowing in an east-west direction is greatest at about 11 a.m. during December, while during June the greatest current flows at about 8 a.m.

There are corresponding changes in the north magnetic force at Tucson, the force being greatest around noon in the Winter and least at that time in the Summer.

Sometimes these currents are regarded as giving rise to part of the observed changes in the earth's magnetism and sometimes as being due to these magnetic changes.

Daily Raid Warnings

EVERY morning and again every evening the people of Vienna are made "air-raid conscious."

From the top of the Ministry of National Defence's building in the heart of the city a siren, with a note that is as blood-curdling as Viennese engineers have been able to devise, screams out its theoretical warning.

Meanwhile, soldiers in posts at various points in and near the city listen for the siren's scream to discover from what points it can be heard most clearly.

ALLAHABAD—No concessions will be granted hunger-strikers in jails of the Indian United Provinces in future.

Great Britain and the Dominions Overseas

Company of Guards Is Largest in Stature In All British Army

Magnificent Body of Men Owe Inception to King Charles II—King's Time Given by Hand—Inconvenient Division Bells

By GLANVILLE CAREW

LONDON (BUP).—The officers and men of the King's Company of the Grenadier Guards must surely rank as the flower of the British Army, at any rate physically. There was a dinner of the company the other night and it was then announced that the average height of the officers is now six feet two and seven-eighths inches, while that of the men is six feet three and one-eighth inches—all but the highest for the past thirty years. The average height of No. 1 platoon is at present no less than six feet four and one-quarter inches.

One man, the tallest Grenadier, is six feet six and one-eighth inches and he is the right hand man of the company. Therefore, because the Grenadiers always take precedence on parade, he is the right hand man of the British army.

We owe the inception of this magnificent body of men to the Merrie Monarch, King Charles II. When the King's Regiment of Foot Guards was raised in 1661 he took the first company as his own.

Always Accurate

Turn from the King's Company to the King's time.

When the Irish Mail, which leaves Euston Station for Holyhead every night at a quarter to nine, first began to run all but 100 years ago there was a practice established which has now become a custom—the custom of giving the King's time to the Traveling Postoffice.

A chronometer, set at the Admiralty exactly at Greenwich time, was handed to a mounted messenger. At a gallop he set off for Euston Station, and at the moment of departure of the train it was handed to the official in charge. At Holyhead the "time" was intimate to the captain of the Dublin packet, and the chronometer went back to London by the opposite mail.

In all these years since then the custom has never altered, and the old-fashioned thick, tubby, chronometer in a leather case which was accompanied the Irish Mail to Holyhead tonight is that which was handed over at Euston Station in the first year of the reign of Victoria in 1837. And that is "The King's Time."

Centre of Contention

Even on its death-bed the old Waterloo Bridge across the Thames seems determined to be the centre of contention. When the bridge began to show signs of collapse about ten years ago, there broke out what finally became an unending controversy. Should the old bridge be merely reconstructed in its old form? Should it be reconstructed and widened to meet the requirements of modern and increased traffic? Should it be pulled down entirely and a new structure take its place? If so, whose design should be adopted? Should it be of steel or stone or concrete? And how should the money be raised?

Scheme after scheme was proposed. Parliament declined to make a grant to aid except on certain terms and a certain scheme. Meanwhile, the old bridge still tottered along on crutches.

Then came a brand new Council. The new council was full of beans and determination. It would not bother about Parliamentary approval or the House of Commons. It would destroy the old bridge, lock, stock and barrel. It would by some sort of financial magic pay for the new bridge out of the municipal taxes without increasing the rate, and without any sort of additional burden on the taxpayers. So the bridge was attacked straight away with much enthusiasm while Londoners watched—and still watch.

Then the plan began to wobble. It would be better to let it lie after all. But the London County Council—unlike other councils—cannot raise a public loan without the consent of Parliament. Therefore, an application to the House of Commons must be made.

But the House remembered that it had twice refused aid except on its own terms. It remembered, too, that the new council had been so cocky in 1924 and how loudly its leaders had crowed that they could do without Parliament and its dictation.

So Parliament said no... and now what?

Inconvenient Bells

There was some discussion in the House of Commons the other night about division bells, and that brought up the question of private division bells: that is to say, bells in the private houses (and clubs) of members who live, or club, near the House.

The furthest away of these is at Admiralty House, which, I should think, is round about a quarter of a mile from Westminster.

Many of the members remembered a practical joke in this connection. The daughter of the then First Lord of the Admiralty married, and the reception was held at Admiralty House. Most of the M.P.'s of the First Lord's politics attended and that gave the Opposition a chance which they gleefully took advantage of. So they pressed a division in the absence of the enemy and the bells rang.

Now it is just possible to run from Admiralty House to the House of Commons in the allotted time of about five minutes between the first bell and the locking of the lobbies. But it happens unfortunately that not many M.P.'s are constructed

MAKING AIR SURVEY OF MINE FIELD

Photographic Work to Cover 30,000 Square Miles of Northern Australia

WORK EXPECTED TO LAST THREE YEARS

MELBOURNE (BUP).—An aerial photographic survey is being made of 30,000 square miles of the northern half of Australia, where enormous rich mineral resources are to be developed with the aid of British capital.

Vast mica deposits in the "outback" of Central Australia, long regarded as desert, are being opened up, and negotiations with British capitalists have been virtually completed for the investment of large sums.

British capital of more than £300,000 is being provided to develop the gold fields of Northern Australia. The extent of the wealth in these fields is unknown at present, and the air survey, which will last three years, is the first attempt on a large scale to gauge the hidden mineral resources of the territory.

A great expansion in gold mining in Queensland has also followed on increasing investments of British capital, and considerable attention is being given to oil in Victoria, where one bore has already produced 70,000 barrels.

"I was shown a book entitled, in the Ethiopian tongue, 'Miracles of Christ,'" said Major Chessman. "It contained illustrations of Christ's miracles, exquisitely painted. Some of the miracles were those recorded in the New Testament. But there was one which showed Christ during His childhood. He was represented as walking up a sunbeam, off which His companions fell."

"This beautifully illuminated manuscript, which was of very early date, appears to have been the work of a priest who had come from Palestine."

EVIDENCE FOUND OF NEW MIRACLE

British Consul Exploring Abyssinia Makes Interesting Discovery of Ancient Manuscript

CRANBROOK (BUP).—Evidence of what is claimed to be a miracle of Christ—walking on a sunbeam—which is not recorded in any early Christian writings, is revealed by Major R. E. Chessman, a former consul official now living here in retirement.

Major Chessman explored Abyssinia and the sources of the Blue Nile while he was acting as British Consul in Northwest Ethiopia. He visited the Coptic monastery of Narga Silasi, which stands on an island in the great Lake Tana. Few Europeans have ever penetrated to this little-known territory.

"I was shown a book entitled, in the Ethiopian tongue, 'Miracles of Christ,'" said Major Chessman. "It contained illustrations of Christ's miracles, exquisitely painted. Some of the miracles were those recorded in the New Testament. But there was one which showed Christ during His childhood. He was represented as walking up a sunbeam, off which His companions fell."

"This beautifully illuminated manuscript, which was of very early date, appears to have been the work of a priest who had come from Palestine."

CONDEMNED TO SAIL FOREVER

Stowaway Can Land Only at One Port—Prisoner at Others

SYDNEY (BUP).—A stowaway who is condemned to sail the seas perpetually has arrived in Sydney Harbor aboard the steamship Pensilva.

The only port in the world at which Elias Wolford, 24, can land is Sydney, and it is unlikely that the Pensilva will ever call there.

Last December, Wolford, hungry, workless, and forced to desperate measures by the loss of all his papers, crept on board the Pensilva while she was alongside the wharf at Huelva, Spain. For two days he remained in hiding in the propeller shaft tunnel, and when the freighter was at sea he appeared on deck.

Since then he has been on the ship, working while at sea, and looked and guarded while in port, for if he escapes the master of the Pensilva would be liable to a heavy fine.

All Prison Inmates Now Sent to School Under British Plan

Even Local Jails Included in Scheme to Kill Crime by Kindness—Sports and Recreation Also Provided for Convicts

LONDON (CPC).—The cheapest way to get an education in Great Britain is to commit a crime and get thrown into jail. More than 14,000 convicts in British prisons are today studying such subjects as shorthand, music and foreign languages—voluntarily. Classes are now established in every local jail as well as penitentiaries throughout England and Wales. (In the United States such educational facilities usually are available only in penitentiaries.)

Popular Subjects

Other subjects popular with the prisoners are history, literature, handicrafts, science and gardening. The majority of the "students" are rapacious readers. They will tackle anything from a "thriller" to a textbook on campanology. Economics also appeal to them.

The plays of Galsworthy and G. B. Shaw are always in great demand. And other popular authors are Ethel M. Dell, John Buchan, K. Chesterton, Joseph Conrad and George Birmingham.

Two or three hours a day in the classroom is not enough for Britain's convicts. The majority of the cells resemble private studies and when the occupants finish their day's work, such as gardening, mending mail bags, painting, they go to their cells and indulge in a few hours of "homework," prison teachers report.

Four Languages

An official of the British Institute of Adult Education tells of one man who, after a short term at Maidstone Jail, learned four languages—French, German, Spanish and Italian.

SAYS MAN MAY MAKE ANIMALS

Scientist Claims X-Rays Will Give Possibility of Changing Species

LONDON (BUP).—New races of animals and plants can be made by the use of X-rays. It will be possible, in the next ten years, to obtain more changes in species than Nature has achieved in the last 10,000 years.

These are the startling claims made by Dr. C. C. Hurst, the scientist, in his book "Heredit and the Ascent of Man."

Dr. Hurst was a research student of Trinity College, Cambridge, and is the author of standard works on genetics and evolution.

To produce a higher civilization, Dr. Hurst proposes that the State should intervene to breed from a selected few intellectuals a race of high intelligence.

He shows how recent research in "genes," the invisible atoms of life, which transmit characteristics from one generation to another, has made it possible to change the course of Nature, to give science control over the creation of new species and give man the power of replacing natural human selection by artificial selection—with power to shape his own destiny.

By means of X-rays, with which they attack these atoms of life, the scientists may produce not only new plants but new animals unlike any that already exist, Dr. Hurst declares.

PLAN GREAT ROAD CENSUS FOR BRITAIN

Every Type of Road Vehicle Will Be Included in Count

PRINCIPLE OBJECT ROAD IMPROVEMENT

LONDON (BUP).—The great traffic census ever taken in Britain will be carried out during the week beginning August 12, under arrangements made by the Minister of Transport.

Every type of road vehicle, except steam rollers, will be included and for the first time pedestrians will be counted at selected points to find out where adequate footpaths are most needed.

10,000 Enumerators

At many points in the country areas and county boroughs there will be a twenty-four-hour census. Elsewhere the count will begin at 6 a.m. and finish at 10 p.m. each day. At least 10,000 enumerators will keep watch from between 5,000 and 6,000 selected points.

The principal object of the census is to provide adequate data, so that highway authorities may be able to prepare their schemes for road improvements on a scientific basis to meet the needs of the ever-increasing traffic. Records will be kept of the daily average number and tonnage of vehicles, also of the road surfacing materials in use at the census points.

The date has been selected as being the peak period of holiday road traffic.

Every part of England, Scotland and Wales will be included with the exception of the metropolitan area, where separate records are kept by the Commissioner of Police.

SYDNEY DEVELOPS CRAZE FOR MILK

Bars For Selling Bacterial Fluid Doing Heavy Night and Day Trade

SYDNEY, N.S.W. (BUP).—A remarkable development of the "milk bar" trade in Sydney in the last year has caused jubilation among the dairymen who supply the city.

"The milk habit has become a craze of large proportions with Sydney's citizens, and young and old patronize the 'milk bars' day and night. The fruit drink and soda fountain businesses have almost died out, and many proprietors of such establishments have converted them to 'milk bars.'"

The first "milk bar" was opened in Sydney little more than two years ago. There are now more than thirty bars in the city area, relying on the increasing popularity of the milk drink in its dozens of various forms and flavorings for their thousands of customers.

Some of the bars are selling as much as 1,000 gallons a week. They are situated in the most frequented streets in order to attract custom both day and night, and some pay heavy rentals.

Judicial Decision Puts an End to Ancient Privilege

Pronouncement by Privy Council's Committee Made Without Passion or Prejudice—Gives Dominion Parliament Right to Interfere With Royal Prerogative

By GLANVILLE CAREW

(British United Press)

"THEY (the Great Britain and the Dominions) are autonomous communities within the British Empire, equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs, though united by a common allegiance to the Crown, and freely associated as members of the British Commonwealth of Nations."

Such were the words of the now famous declaration by the Imperial Conference held at Westminster in the year 1926. And these which follow are the words of what is commonly referred to as the Statute of Westminster, 1931, an act of the Imperial Parliament designed to implement in legal form that declaration and other conformable declarations and resolutions of another such conference held in 1930.

Epoch-Making Words

"No law and no provision of any law made after the commencement of this act by the Parliament of a Dominion shall be void or inoperative on the ground that it is repugnant to the law of England or the provisions of any existing or future act of Parliament of the United Kingdom... and the powers of the Parliament of a Dominion shall include the power to repeal or amend any such act in so far as the same is part of the law of the Dominion."

Also: "The powers conferred by this act upon the Parliament of Canada... shall be restricted to the enactment of laws in relation to matters within the competence of the Parliament of Canada."

To the plain man those words would seem to have a plain unqualified meaning that a self-governing Dominion is at liberty to govern itself. But out of them has arisen a question which has only now been answered. "Has question was—looking from the subject to the King—had the Parliament of such a Dominion the power to abolish the ancient right of a British subject to appeal to the King in Council?" and—looking from the King to the subject—"Had it the right to interfere with the Royal Prerogative?"

Not until June 6, 1935, was that question answered once and for all, and without any possibility of being overruled. The judicial committee of the Privy Council answered "Yes."

And so has come to an end, in a calm judicial atmosphere, without passion or prejudice, one of the oldest of our legal principles and procedures.

Preliminary Objection

Actually, the issue arose out of a preliminary objection taken by defendants in respect of a Canadian case that the Dominion Parliament had not (as it purported to do by its legislation) power to take away such right of appeal to the Privy Council in criminal matters. He it here remembered that the decision of the judicial committee was restricted to criminal matters.

The Canadian case required additional interest in Britain in that its hearing was almost contemporary with the delivery of judgment—on a case involving the right of the Irish Free State to abolish totally the same right of appeal in all cases. This case was complicated by the existence and implications of the Irish Treaty. But again the Privy Council said "Yes."

The status of the Privy Council in legal matters is curious, and its beginnings go very far back. In Anglo-Saxon and Norman times the kings had their Council, which after a time was divided into a Great Council which became the House of Lords, and a smaller or Privy Council. From about the year 1540 this latter possessed a regular staff of clerks and other officials, and from it much of the existing administration of the country has been developed.

Number Decreased

The tendency to decrease the number of members of the Council resulted in the formation of a still smaller body which became the modern Cabinet. Concurrently, the Privy Council was gradually reduced to formal business. Technically, various ministries in this country—such as the Boards of Trade and Education—are committees of the Privy Council.

It was not until the year 1833, by virtue of an act passed in the reign of William IV, that the judicial committee of the Privy Council became a statutory body as it exists today. In the course of the century which has passed since then the judicial committee has been the final court of appeal for the British Empire outside the British Isles. It has been the tribunal to dispense ultimate justice to about 400,000 people, and its influence has extended over about a quarter of the habitable globe. No tribunal since courts were ever held upon appeal to deal with such complex and varied affairs. A glance at its case list shows appeals from every Dominion, from India, from every Crown colony, from places on every continent. The subjects of these have ranged from the ordinary law of the British Empire to issues concerning religious customs and the

If these happenings follow a more regular cycle than do sunspots, it is to be presumed that they are more directly connected with the at present unknown cause of the sun's changing activity, it is stated.

During the past year a recently introduced instrument, in which the great tongues of flame rising from the sun's surface can be directly observed, has given a more accurate indication of the turn of the cycle than the time-honored dark spots which can be seen through any telescope.

This was revealed by Dr. H. Spencer Jones, the Astronomer Royal, when he presented his annual report at the visitation of the observatory by the board of visitors under Sir F. Gowland Hopkins, president of the Royal Society.

The instrument is the "Spectroheliograph," and its special power is that it provides an image of the sun's disc in the light emitted by one particular kind of atom only, that of the chemical element sodium or common salt.

SUN YIELDING NEW SECRET

Astronomers of Greenwich Observatory Solving Mystery of Cycle of Spots

LONDON (BUP).—The sun is gradually yielding one of its most closely guarded secrets—the mystery of the eleven-year sunspot cycle, which affects both radio reception and weather conditions on the earth—to the astronomers of Greenwich Observatory.

During the past year a recently introduced instrument, in which the great tongues of flame rising from the sun's surface can be directly observed, has given a more accurate indication of the turn of the cycle than the time-honored dark spots which can be seen through any telescope.
